Join in the 3rd Annual Celebration of Student Writing!

Friday, April 15, 2011 • Noon - 2:45 p.m. • Adelbert Gym

Interactive Displays • Competitions • Refreshments
Writing Idol Contest, Sponsored by the Writing Resource Center

All teachers of writing-intensive classes are invited to participate with their classes in this highly anticipated event. If you are teaching a SAGES seminar or a lower-division writing-intensive course in any discipline, we encourage you to register your class for participation in this year’s celebration.

DEADLINE FOR REGISTRATION: MARCH 1, 2011

Undergraduate participation in the celebration helps to

✓ Publicize the exciting things happening in your course to the university at large
✓ Share student writing beyond the boundaries of the classroom
✓ Foster inter-disciplinary writing and research
✓ Promote multimedia communication strategies
Spring is on its way. Get started today!

1. Build the Celebration into your course syllabus.
   This event gives students a rewarding opportunity to practice presenting their writing publicly and advertises the exciting work coming out of our seminars. Some teachers give extra credit for participation; others treat the presentation as a group report. Think about how you can incorporate the Celebration as part of your assignment sequence.

2. Complete a Registration Form.
   Fill out a registration form (available online) for each class that will participate, and submit it by March 1, 2011. When you register, you reserve an easel or table (or both) to be used by your students for their presentations.

3. Start planning!
   Numerous resources are available to help inspire ideas and spawn creativity. Models from other universities’ celebrations are available on our website. You will also find links to several CWRU support teams who are here to help every step of the way, with everything from presentation workshops for students to multimedia workshops for students and teachers.
