Thérèse Kuoh-Moukoury is a renowned author, essayist, jurist, and advocate for women’s and children’s rights throughout Africa. Born in 1938 in Douala, Cameroon, Kuoh-Moukoury is a pioneer of African literature as her novel Rencontres essentielles (1969) is recognized as the first written by a female author from sub-Saharan Africa. Other major publications include Les Couples dominos (1973), one of the first sociological essays to analyze biracial couples and her novella “Colors of Tears” published in 2006 in The Northwest Review. She also served as president of the Union of African and Malagasy Women and as advisor to African governments on the status of women. Her groundbreaking novel has been translated into English as Essential Encounters (2002) and published by the MLA Texts and Translations Series.

Thérèse Kuoh-Moukoury is a renowned author, essayist, jurist, and advocate for women’s and children’s rights throughout Africa. Born in 1938 in Douala, Cameroon, Kuoh-Moukoury is a pioneer of African literature as her novel Rencontres essentielles (1969) is recognized as the first written by a female author from sub-Saharan Africa. Other major publications include Les Couples dominos (1973), one of the first sociological essays to analyze biracial couples and her novella “Colors of Tears” published in 2006 in The Northwest Review. She also served as president of the Union of African and Malagasy Women and as advisor to African governments on the status of women. Her groundbreaking novel has been translated into English as Essential Encounters (2002) and published by the MLA Texts and Translations Series.

Sponsored by the Ethnic Studies Program, the French and Francophone Studies Program, the Department of Modern Languages & Literatures Speaker’s Committee, and the Women’s and Gender Studies Program.

case.edu/artsci/fr_studies
216.368.8961