A note to NIH researchers....

It is probably a good thing that the fall break is October 18 – 19, 2010, this year. You will be able to use the time away from the classroom to update your publications list at the eRA Commons.

Back in June, the government released NOT-OD-10-103, entitled My NCBI Tool to Replace eRA Commons for Bibliography Management. This notice announces the change to My Bibliography at My NCBI as the authoritative site for all publications by all researchers. When accessed by using the NIH Login, a researcher’s publications automatically populate the publications page of the personal profile at the Commons. The change officially occurred on July 23, 2010, and further assures the government of compliance with the NIH Public Access Policy.

A further enhancement to this policy change occurs on October 22, 2010, when any publication that had been added to the eRA Commons manually disappears. It is of the utmost importance to establish the My NCBI account as soon as possible and to initiate My Bibliography.

Additional information is available at the following web sites:

NOT-OD-10-103: My NCBI Tool to Replace eRA Commons for Bibliography Management

My NCBI - Home

My NCBI Help -- NCBI Bookshelf

The Cleveland Health Sciences Library provides this information as a courtesy. We think this is what will happen. We do not actually have any NIH grants and we are unable to really check any of this information. However, we are most anxious to test our hypotheses with any and all of you. Please contact us at 216.368.3218 or by email at hclref@case.edu.