Dear Dr. Gómez,

I was delighted to receive your of January 22, and I am pleased to know that you find your experience in our course in international health useful to you today. We will offer the course this coming year for the eighth time. It remains very successful.

I particularly noted in your letter that you mentioned the students. Interest in opportunities for experiences abroad is very high, and we always have some students who are fluent in Spanish and who seek opportunities in Latin America. They are at two levels: students who have the summer free after their first year of medical school, and students who have one or two months available in their senior year. Limited funds are available to support student experiences abroad, and more generous funding is available for students who can develop a research project for their time in another country. I wonder whether you would have any interest in hosting any of our students?

I wish you success with your traveler's clinic. I am sure you are meeting an important need in Colombia.

Sincerely yours,

Thomas M. Daniel, M.D.

Dear Doctor Daniel:

I recently read with delight the progress of the center for International Health, in the article in the IDCNA by Mr. Torjesen. In 1987 as a participant in the first course in International Health had the pleasure of meeting Amy, doctors Mahmoud and Torjesen among others, and I believe that experience gave me the kick to continue my training in infectious diseases which I finished at Jackson Memorial in Miami and interest for travel medicine .

Two years ago I moved to Bogotá, Colombia and while working as a clinician at the fundacion santa fe (a tertiary care facility), created the first travelers clinic in Colombia which just started to operate three months ago; considering your interests in Latin America I decided to write and maybe open new links-whether they may be related to research, student exchange or others.

I welcome your communication and correspondence should you have any interest.

Best regards to Mr. Torjesen and all of you,

Sincerely,

Juan M. Gómez, M.D.
