

$3 Million Commitment

Renews and Extends Mt. Sinai Health Care Foundation Support

The Mt. Sinai Health Care Foundation has awarded Case Western Reserve University School of Medicine two grants totaling $3 million. A $2 million grant will continue the Mt. Sinai Scholars Program in the basic sciences, which enables the school to attract exceptionally talented researchers to its basic science departments. Since its beginning in 1998, researchers supported by the Mt. Sinai Scholars Program have gone on to successfully garner more than $12 million in external federal and foundation grants.

A $1 million challenge grant will establish the Dean's Catalytic Fund to attract new donors to the School of Medicine and allow Dean Pamela B. Davis, M.D., Ph.D., to invest in faculty recruitment and retention, shared equipment, and special educational programs.

In addition to these grants, the Mt. Sinai Health Care Foundation has supported the health sciences at Case Western Reserve for more than 10 years, including the support of the Mt. Sinai Skills and Simulation Center and grants for recruitment in public health dentistry.

“These Mt. Sinai investments aim to support Case Western Reserve University School of Medicine as a top-tier medical school.... The school's national prominence is not only important for Case, it's vital to Cleveland's future.”
 ~ Mt. Sinai Foundation President Mitchell Balk

Barbara R. Snyder and Pamela B. Davis, with Mt. Sinai Foundation Chairman vic gelb (left) and Chair of the Academic Medicine/Bioscience Grantmaking Committee Dick Bogomolny.