"In 21st century America slavery remains woven into the fabric of our daily lives. On any given day, the tomatoes in the sandwich we eat or the oranges in the juice we drink may have been picked by workers in involuntary servitude." The CIW is a worker-based organization striving to eliminate modern day slavery and other labor abuses within the agricultural industry.

And They're Coming To Campus!

The Coalition of Immokalee Workers is one of only two U.S. Recipients of the Robert F. Kennedy Human Rights Award. This is your chance to meet members of the Coalition in person. They will be on hand to discuss the labor issues facing agricultural workers today and how action you take right here in Ohio can lead to change across the nation.

This event brought to you by the Mandel School of Applied Social Sciences, the CWRU Social Justice Institute (case.edu/socialjustice), and the Collaborative Initiative to End Human Trafficking. For additional CIW presentation dates and locations or to learn more about modern day slavery contact the Collaborative Initiative to End Human Trafficking at collaborative_initiative@yahoo.com or call 440-356-2254
