The Process – General Information

A reasonable workplace accommodation is any modification or adjustment to an employee’s customary tasks or responsibilities that enables a qualified employee with a “disability” to perform essential job functions without undue hardship on Case Western Reserve University. A reasonable workplace accommodation assures that a qualified individual with a disability has employment rights and privileges equal to those of employees without disabilities. To consider your request for a workplace accommodation, please provide the required information and submit it to the Office of Inclusion, Diversity and Equal Opportunity. Upon receipt of this information you will be contacted to schedule a confidential appointment by a representative from the Office of Equity, who will provide additional assistance in the determination and implementation of the accommodation.

Additionally, in the context of assessing an accommodation request, documentation will be needed to determine if the employee has a disability covered by the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA), to determine the functional limitations, to use as a guideline for identifying an effective and reasonable accommodation and to determine the entitlement to the accommodation. With your permission, documentation might include consultations with knowledgeable professional sources, such as physicians, psychologists, occupational and physical therapists, rehabilitation specialists, and organizations with expertise in adaptations for specific disabilities.

The Office of Equity will coordinate with your supervisor, Parking and Access Services, or appropriate parties. For most disabilities, the faculty or staff member will also be referred to the appropriate office for a confidential consultation and assistance with the process.

The faculty or staff member has the responsibility to ensure that the medical provider follows through on requests for medical information.
