National Youth Sports Program

The National Youth Sports Program (NYSP) at Case Western Reserve University is an enriching five-week summer experience that combines sports, education, nutrition, and health services for more than 300 Greater Cleveland participants ages 8-16 each year. During the program, participants play sports to improve their physical fitness and health habits, learn information about career choices, and engage in academic enrichment at CWRU. All participants receive free medical screenings and free daily nutritious meals, reinforcing the concept of good health for life.

Program Components

- Educate participants about career and educational opportunities.
- Expand sports skills through an extensive selection of offerings to improve physical fitness and promote an active lifestyle.
- Supervision and support provided by more than 50 professional athletes, local teachers, and college-age staff who are trained to support and nurture all students.

NYSP Impact

- 15,000+ Cleveland youth and young adults have participated in NYSP since its inception at CWRU in 1970.
- More than $400,000 in generous public, private and university donations provide funding support for NYSP each year, 100% of which is applied to camp costs.
- For more than 55 years, NYSP's extensive alumni network has been a source of connection between participants.
- 1:8 staff to camper ratio ensures each participant receives dedicated supervision and instruction from counselors who are background- and heart-checked to care for and coach campers.
