UNIVERSITY

WE RECENTLY CELEBRATED OUR 125TH ANNIVERSARY

We have so much history, we could write a book!

SO WE DID.

This commemorative book is available on amazon.com for $30. All proceeds go to our Annual Fund, which supports student scholarships.

CELEBRATING 125 YEARS Case Western Reserve University School of Law

From the beginning in 1892, Case Western Reserve University School of Law set a precedent for pushing educational boundaries and providing access to students of all races, genders and backgrounds. This photo-driven archival book explores 125 years of diversity, leadership, world impact and progressive initiatives at the law school. Share in the success of alumni and faculty who contribute to the school's tradition of excellence. Learn the law school story—its brave beginning and significant milestones during more than a century. See how the school is poised for the future, as a national leader in legal education.

Q & A

Appointed to lead the law school in 2013, Jessica Berg and Michael Scharf are among the longest-serving law school deans in the country. We caught up with them for an annual update about the law school.

Tell us about the theme of this issue of In Brief?

MICHAEL: We are celebrating the conclusion of the most successful fundraising campaign in the history of the law school. Ten years ago, the University Board of Trustees set a goal of $32 million for the law school's Forward Thinking Campaign. Our alumni's generosity exceeded all expectations, donating a total of $58 million, including the largest gift the school has ever received. Most importantly, over fifty percent of our alums contributed during the campaign, an extremely high percentage compared to other law schools. This issue of In Brief tells the story of some of those gifts and how they have transformed our school.

What does the law school do with all that money?

JESSICA: Our endowment has grown tremendously and has just crossed the $100 million threshold, putting us in rare company. We now have the 32nd largest endowment of any U.S. law school. As with our annual fund dollars, much of the interest from the endowment goes to fund scholarships to enable us to attract the best and brightest students. Our bar pass rate and employment rate have been steadily improving. And this year our incoming median GPA is 3.63, up from 3.46, the most significant increase in years.

MICHAEL: We also now have 14 endowed chaired professorships, which enable us to attract and retain some of the top law teachers and scholars in the country. Our faculty was ranked 32nd best in the nation this year in terms of scholarly impact. Two of our faculty members, Jonathan Adler and Casandra Robertson, were cited in Supreme Court opinions this term. And during the past 12 months our faculty's expert views were quoted in more than 900 separate news stories, some published in hundreds of different newspapers around the country and world.

JESSICA: The money also goes to support our signature experiential education program, which integrates practical experience into all three years of law school, culminating in a capstone clinic or externship for every student. As described in this issue, our Moot Court and Mock Trial teams had an unprecedented string of successes this year. The Spring 2019 issue of PreLaw Magazine ranked us 12th best school for practical training, right up there with Yale and the University of Chicago.

MICHAEL: We've also been able to complete a number of building projects that have reinvigorated our facility with the newest teaching technology. In this issue, you will see photos of some of our newly renovated spaces, including the BakerHostetler Courtroom, active learning classroom, Burton D. Morgan/Tarolli IP Venture Clinic, and Stephanie Simon student café. On top of all that, when the Cleveland Institute of Art moved to Euclid Blvd, the University transformed the 4.2 acre space next to our school into a beautiful park dubbed East Bell Commons, which is pictured on the back cover of this magazine.

Let's talk about that $10 million gift.

JESSICA: We have an incredible alumnus named Coleman (Coley) Burke, who is an extremely successful New York real estate lawyer, land developer, and amateur paleontologist. Every year when we would visit his office, Coley would show us a new fossilized dinosaur that he had collected during his excursions to South America. There were two things Coley loved to talk with us about — his favorite professor Leon Gabinet (for whom he endowed a chair in his honor) and his travel adventures across the globe. Coley decided that he wanted to do something to help both the environment and our school by endowing the largest law school environmental law center in the country. And we had just the right faculty member up for the challenge of serving as the Center's director. We are excited to tell the story of the new Burke Center in this issue.

What other news do you want to share?

MICHAEL: We are pleased to report that the 2020 U.S. News and World Report specialty rankings ranked us in the top ten law schools for Health Law, in the top 20 law schools for International Law, and in the top 25 percent of law schools for Intellectual Property Law. And PreLaw Magazine, a publication of National Jurist, recently ranked us as a "Top School" for Health Law (A+), International Law (A+), Intellectual Property Law (A+), Business and Corporate Law (A), Criminal Law (A-) and Public Interest Law (A-). Few law schools have so many highly ranked specialty programs.

JESSICA: We celebrated the legacy of some incredible retiring faculty this year, including Professor Lewis Katz, our Director of Foreign Graduate Legal Studies, who taught at our school for a record 53 years, and Professor Judy Lipton, the former Associate Dean for Experiential Education, who taught in our Clinic for 36 years. Like his close friend Leon Gabinet, who came back after retiring to teach Tax Law, Lew has decided to re-join us as an adjunct faculty member, and is teaching his favorite Criminal Procedure course this year.

You've just completed your sixth year as co-deans. What is coming up?

MICHAEL: In the upcoming year, we will be working with our faculty, staff, and alumni to craft a new strategic plan to build upon the successes of the past six years and position the law school to continue to thrive in tomorrow's legal world. We welcome your input!

JESSICA: The law school is benefitting in so many ways from the historic alumni support during the Forward Thinking campaign. We hope to see you on campus, or during our travels to your home towns throughout the world. We can't thank you enough for the part that you have played in taking our law school to the next level, and look forward to working with all of you to achieve our future goals. This is only the beginning of the story!

Case Western Reserve University School of Law

RAISES $58 MILLION, capped off by a $10 million landmark gift from alumnus to establish the Coleman P. Burke Center for Environmental Law

Coleman P. Burke's contribution—the law school's largest-ever—will support interdisciplinary education and research

Nearly a decade after endowing a professorship in honor of his law school mentor Leon Gabinet, alumnus Coleman P. Burke '70, has committed $10 million to establish a center at the Case Western Reserve University School of Law that combines two of the driving passions of his life: the environment and the law.

The gift—the largest in the law school's 126-year history—creates the Coleman P. Burke Center for Environmental Law. The Burke Center will dramatically expand students' learning opportunities in environmental law, while also establishing the school as a leading intellectual hub of interdisciplinary research and thought leadership in this rapidly growing field.

"This center will help prepare students to meet the environmental challenges of today, as well as those that inevitably will emerge in the future."

— Professor Jonathan H. Adler

"Our natural world faces increasingly critical and complex environmental challenges," said Burke, who has spent 40 years engaged in such issues as a director of the National Audubon Society, the National Forest Foundation, the Woods Hole Oceanographic Institution, the Yale Peabody Museum of Natural History, the New York Botanical Garden and the Wildlife Conservation Society, among other leadership activities. "This center will combine the law school's significant expertise in the subject with the university's broader related strengths to make meaningful contributions to address them."

Case Western Reserve law professor Jonathan H. Adler, one of the country's most innovative and frequently cited environmental law scholars, will serve as the center's director.

"Today's environmental problems require a willingness to work outside and across disciplinary boundaries," Adler said. "It is our hope that this center will foster productive dialogue and analysis of these issues and prepare a new generation of environmental lawyers."

Last year, Adler, who joined the university in 2001, was the nation's eighth-most-cited public law scholar (excluding constitutional law) for the preceding four years. Adler was 49 at the time of the list's publication; the seven scholars ranked above him had an average age of 63. He is currently completing a book on environmental federalism for the 21st century for Cambridge University Press, the seventh book he has authored or edited.

"We are profoundly grateful for this transformational gift from an alumnus whose decade's-long commitment to the environment has helped preserve and nurture some of our country's most treasured natural and marine resources," Case Western Reserve President Barbara R. Snyder said. "With the leadership of Professor Adler, one of our university's most dedicated and dynamic scholars, this center will extend and expand upon the spirit of Coleman Burke's own personal service."

The Burke Center's first major event takes place this fall, with a symposium centered on the upcoming 50th anniversary of the founding of the Environmental Protection Agency in 1970. Papers from this symposium will be published in the Case Western Reserve Law Review. The center also is planning a spring 2020 symposium on environmental health, to be co-sponsored with the school's Law-Medicine Center—the nation's first institute centered on the subject of health law.

The Burke Center will support scholarships for students interested in environmental law, along with faculty positions in the area. It will build on the school's national leadership in experiential learning by funding environmental law externships and related opportunities around the country. Finally, the center will sponsor student research and development of additional courses in environmental law.

"This center will help prepare students to meet the environmental challenges of today," Adler said, "as well as those that inevitably will emerge in the future."

In addition to his service on the Audubon Society and National Forest Foundation, Burke also is a member of the Leadership Council of the Yale School of Forestry & Environmental Studies. As a member of the international multidisciplinary society, the Explorers Club, he also has led two expeditions for dinosaur fossils in the Santa Cruz Province in Argentina and explored rivers in Tierra del Fuego.

Burke, of Hobe Sound, Florida, is the founder and managing partner of Waterfront NY, Bulgroup Properties and North River Company, commercial real estate companies with holdings in New York, Maine, Massachusetts, Colorado, New Hampshire, Pennsylvania, California and Vermont. Before establishing Waterfront, Burke was a partner at the law firm of Burke & Burke for 13 years. He also has created the Coleman and Susan Burke Foundation, named after him and his wife of nearly four decades. ■

The moot courtroom was transformed with a gift from BakerHostetler, which celebrated its 100th anniversary at the same time the law school celebrated its 125th. The original funding was donated in memory of Joseph C. Hostetler, its founding partner and a 1908 graduate.

School of Law renovated throughout the capital campaign with alumni contributions

Alumni support throughout the capital campaign led to numerous building upgrades over the past five years. The moot courtroom received a transformation with new carpet, an improved jury box, expanded bench and video and audio technology. The courtroom also features framed photographs of great legal minds who graduated from CWRU Law throughout history. The project was made possible by a gift from BakerHostetler. The law firm celebrated its 100th anniversary at the same time the law school celebrated its 125th. The original funding was donated by the wife of Joseph C. Hostetler, its founding partner and a 1908 graduate.

The law school also created a new IP Venture Clinic space with support from the Burton D. Morgan Foundation and the Tarolli law firm. The suite provides a tech-equipped conference space for clients to meet with Case Western Reserve law students as they file for patents and seek legal assistance in launching new products.

The law school's first active learning classroom was created on the ground floor, providing spaces for interactive group work with monitors at each table, enhancing the educational experience for students. New Brody individual workstations were added to the library, and its conference rooms were renovated. The workstations provide quiet, walled spaces for individual study.

The law school also transformed its cafe with a gift from George Simon '96. He named the new Res Judicafe after his daughter Stephanie Simon Bartos '08. Class gifts from students in the classes of 2018 and 2019, along with matching gifts from alumni, created a new student kitchenette space on the first floor of the law school.

The IP Venture Clinic, a new high-tech conference room for students to hold client meetings, was created with support from the Burton D. Morgan Foundation and the Tarolli law firm.

U.S. District Court Judge Dan Aaron Polster speaks at Case Western Reserve University about the opioid litigation. Polster is presiding over the case and is a frequent lecturer at the law school.

OPIOID Epidemic

Case Western Reserve law grads play central roles in unprecedented opioid litigation

A terrible opioid epidemic, only about 20 years old, continues to ravage our country and society. The cost in ruined and ended lives is heartbreaking, and without measure.

Other costs incurred by governmental entities in dealing with the epidemic can, perhaps, be measured, though they are said to amount, nationwide, to a total figure in the many billions. Those costs are the subject of more than 1,600 separate lawsuits from around the United States, consolidated and transferred as multi-district litigation to the federal district court in Cleveland. In re National Prescription Opiate Litigation (the “Opioid MDL”) may be the largest, most complex litigation in American history. It dwarfs the tobacco litigation, the asbestos litigation, the 9/11 terrorism litigation, and even the great oil spill cases of the past. Among the hundreds of lawyers involved in the case, CWRU law graduates are playing an outsized role.

During the time he was interviewed for this article, a little over an hour, attorney David R. Cohen '91 received 20 emails asking for his guidance or rulings on significant issues in the Opioid MDL. Each of them required his considered response; none of them was a no-brainer. Those kinds of demands on his time are typical, he says.

Cohen is a Special Master in the Opioid MDL, one of three appointed by presiding Judge Dan Aaron Polster, who is a frequent guest lecturer at the law school. Cohen says that his primary area of responsibility is umpiring discovery. He was polite enough to put off attending to the messages until the interview was over, but Cohen was clearly anxious to get back to work on a job that he compares to “drinking from a fire hose every day.”

Cohen is an attorney who seems to be doing exactly what he was meant to do. After what he cheerfully characterizes as a failed business career, he got into law school at age 29 pretty much by the luck of the Irish – the Irish, in this case, being the beloved former Dean of Students, Dan Clancy, who encouraged Cohen to take the LSAT. Cohen began his studies thinking that he didn't really want to be an attorney – “in some ways, I still don't want to be an attorney,” he says, and he's serious. But in law school, “it felt great to be good at something again.”

After a couple of years of private practice, he “fell into a job” as law clerk to “the best boss ever,” Kate O'Malley '82, who had just been appointed U.S. District Court Judge. (She's now on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit, in Washington, D.C.) Ten years later, he was still her law clerk when she “kicked me out of the nest,” he says, and appointed him special master in a case. He rented an office, bought a desk, and never looked back: he has made an impressive career since then, serving as special master in dozens of cases around the country. It's all he does.

In less than two years, hundreds of depositions have been taken in the Opioid MDL, hundreds of millions of pages produced, and Cohen has called balls and strikes on all of the parties' discovery disputes. But, as he points out, sheer mass is only part of the story. The allegations in the case include some plain vanilla tort claims, but also a number of novel claims and legal theories that are stretching the law, he says. And all of this, too, is occurring on a fast litigation track.

Peter Weinberger '75 is one of the lawyers pressing those claims, both novel and vanilla. He is nationally renowned as a trial lawyer, and nationally esteemed. That much is evident from his selection as Plaintiffs' Liaison Counsel by hundreds of plaintiffs' lawyers, from around the country, who convened in Cleveland as soon as the multi-district litigation transfer order was issued, in December 2017. His responsibilities include communicating with all plaintiffs' counsel on matters relevant to the Opioid MDL, coordinating discovery efforts, and planning for trial. The first “bellwether” trial is scheduled for this coming October. Given the complexity of the litigation, and the stakes, Weinberger says that being liaison counsel is “a 24/7 job.”

The opioid epidemic had its origins in the 1990s, Weinberger says, when a massive marketing campaign convinced doctors that a new approach to treating pain in their patients was needed, and available. As he explains, pharmaceutical companies claimed that newly-developed synthetic opioids, with their timed-release feature, were a safe substitute for morphine or other addictive painkillers. They were, in Weinberger's view, anything but.

In the Opioid MDL, Weinberger and his plaintiffs' counsel colleagues represent municipalities and other governmental organizations seeking to recoup the $50–60 billion per year that, they allege, the epidemic costs them for such things as health care, law enforcement, emergency and first responders, addiction treatment, child care, and other social services. Plaintiffs also seek various forms of injunctive relief designed to change the behavior of the industry, educate the public, and control pharmaceutical marketing and lobbying. Weinberger foresees a long-term court-supervised program for solving the scourge of opioid addiction.

Weinberger has spent his career in Cleveland. In 1988, he joined Spangenberg, Shibley, and Liber. He served as that firm's managing partner for 17 years, stepping down from that post at the end of 2017.

Weinberger's was the first class to study in the new law school building at CWRU. His favorite professors: Arthur Austin and Ron Coffey – though one of those two (many readers of a certain vintage will be able to guess which one) “scared the living daylights out of me,” he laughingly recalls.

Another familiar face from law school is one that Weinberger now sees at the United States Courthouse with some regularity. Tim Johnson '74, and his law firm Cavitch, Familo and Durkin, represent one of the defendants in the MDL's “Pharmacy Group.” Johnson's client was brought in to the case relatively late, he says – in June 2018. So he, and the client, “had a lot of catching up to do.”

David R. Cohen '91 is a Special Master of the opioid multi-district litigation.

“Plaintiffs are, in effect, all of us.” – Professor Andrew S. Pollis, New York Times. Pollis is a national expert on the litigation and frequently called upon by the media.

Johnson is former president of the Cleveland Metropolitan Bar Association and has had an unusual career, he says, one that mixes litigation and transactional work in about equal parts.

During law school, Johnson and Weinberger shared afternoon rides to downtown Cleveland, where they both worked, part-time, at law firms. Now, they are the only lead lawyers in the upcoming bellwether case who are local Clevelanders. There will be so many other lawyers for that trial, Johnson predicts that it will be difficult to fit them all into the courtroom.

CWRU Professor Andrew Pollis, whose research focuses on the Opioid MDL and who is frequently quoted in the national media about it, points out that plaintiffs face significant problems of proof as to causation, and are pressing “rather attenuated” damage claims in this difficult and complex litigation.

“At the same time, if it gets to the jury, the evidence is going to be so persuasive about the conduct of the opioid industry,” he says, that jurors may be of a mind to award damages. And, since the governmental entities pressing the claims are comprised of their citizens, “plaintiffs are, in effect, all of us” (as the New York Times quoted him saying).

Opioids do have a legitimate, useful purpose, Pollis says, that differentiates this particular public health crisis, and the Opioid MDL, from the nationwide tobacco litigation of some years ago. Doctors legally prescribe opioids, he points out, because “for some patients it is the only way to get meaningful relief from pain.”

Even Peter Weinberger concedes that there is a place for the use of opioids for health problems such as intractable cancers or acute pain – “limited use,” he says, “under rigorous scrutiny.” ■

Fusion program partners with University's think[box]

to provide students a firsthand innovation experience

Since its launch in 2009, the Fusion program has served as a training ground for graduate students in law, science and management to develop the skills needed to meet the underlying challenges of successful technology entrepreneurship and innovation.

Mixing students into interdisciplinary teams, the program is structured to lead them through a collaborative analysis of new technological innovation, with each team simulating the advancement of a raw invention to the point of presenting a juried investment pitch, demonstrating the product's financial potential, intellectual property strength and an early-stage technological development plan.

For the first time in the program, the students' moved beyond simulating a new product and, instead, leveraged the resources of a flagship institution at the university to bring their ideas to life.

The Larry Sears and Sally Zlotnick Sears think[box]

Housed in the seven-floor Richey Mixon Building on CWRU's campus, think[box] is built to be accessible to even the most modest ideas, but is also capable of serving as a start-to-finish launchpad for entrepreneurs looking to develop a product from a prototype to a commercial reality. The on-campus facility is also the largest of its kind in the country that is open to the community and free to use.

Each floor of think[box] represents a different stage of innovation, starting with community and collaboration – where ideas are developed – to the entrepreneurship and incubator levels – where innovators can take advantage of a range of services from the many think[box] partners, such as the School of Law's IP Venture Clinic, CWRU LaunchNET and the Technology Transfer Office. It is a self-service model that allows entrepreneurs and prototype inventors to consult with free legal representation for a range of corporate legal and intellectual property issues. Help is also available for developing business plans and investment pitches, commercialization and fundraising strategies and access to free or low-cost space to house their startup company. ▶

Think[box] houses a cornucopia of state-of-the-art prototyping and fabrication equipment including 3-D printers, electronics development and wood and metal fabrication machines – all with the relevant tools needed by a creator, including the open-source documents and free classes needed to operate them.

"We've structured think[box] so a person can come and take their idea as far as they want. Any inventor can come in at the first level, develop an idea and build a prototype," said Tiffany McNamara, Senior Director of Strategic Partnerships and Business Development at think[box].

“For all of our student teams, using a facility like this was invaluable. By the end of the class, each team created a real, working prototype of their product.”

– Ted Theofrastous, Managing Director and co-founder of the Fusion program

“From there, if they wish, they can get consultation on market viability, intellectual property, investability and more.”

Serving thousands of students and entrepreneurs each year, think[box] was a natural partner for the Fusion program, which has worked with different technologies each year, including the internet of things (IoT), advanced medical imaging, clinical diagnostics, neuromodulation and water technologies, including a purification project that was developed in partnership with NASA.

“Every year, we’re looking to push students further into the innovation process,” said Ted Theofrastous, Managing Director and co-founder of the Fusion program. “In the past, we’ve worked with students to develop strategies for existing inventions based on a common scientific domain, usually coming out of CWRU laboratories. This year, we wanted to leverage the tremendous assets the university has in place to push students to actually design and prototype something new, using a common technology platform.”

Hands-on Product Development

Moving from the classrooms at the Weatherhead School of Business to the sixth floor of Think[box], Fusion students learned firsthand what goes into taking an idea from concept and actually building it into a product.

The class sessions at think[box] started with technical training for students to learn the capabilities and programming functions of an Arduino microcontroller, an open-source electronic IoT prototyping platform capable of bringing smart functionality to independent electronic devices. From there, students learned about the available resources in think[box] and software design from Nick Barendt, Executive Director of the School of Engineering’s Institute for Smart, Secure and Connected Systems (ISSACS).

“To think that we were able to effectively introduce law and management students to hands-on electronics design and coding in the context of teaching them the art of commercialization was really remarkable,” said Fusion co-founder, instructor and CWRU chief innovation officer, Joe Jankowski. “It enabled them to move beyond just analyzing potential solutions from a multidisciplinary lens, to being personally connected to the development of their technologies.”

For Rebecca Lindhorst, a 3L law student studying intellectual property with a background in biochemistry and molecular genetics, the process of prototyping a product and taking it through commercialization was eye-opening.

“I’ve been focused on patent law but never had experience in product creation,” said Lindhorst. “Seeing how pieces come together was an incredible learning experience that is going to help me better understand the perspective of the inventors and how I can interact with them and how to pull out the info from them that could give them some type of protectable IP.”

The students were separated into five interdisciplinary teams and challenged to create an IoT product using a basic, over-the-counter Arduino microprocessor that brings smart functionality to stand-alone components. Each team was provided with a complete Arduino kit, containing dozens of useful elements, as well as a small budget to obtain other necessary elements to create a functional prototype.

“The class was such an amazing experience, working not just with the faculty, but also my team members,” said Lindhorst. “Each of us brought our own expertise to the table. We relied on each other and most importantly, learned from each other.”

Working with students in the MBA, engineering and Masters of Patent Practice programs, Lindhorst’s team invented the “Lavender Retriever,” a dual-chambered scent and pheromone diffuser for dogs that relieves anxiety by releasing a combination of lavender essential oil and dog-appeasing pheromones when the sensor detects barking.

“Once we came up with the idea, our first step was to make sure our product was a novel concept that was patentable,” said Lindhorst. “We followed that with extensive market research and found that pet calming products and diffusers were both good markets with healthy annual growth.”

In the United States alone, there are more than 60 million dog owners. The team’s research showed that 21 percent had tried pet calming products ranging from $14 to $21 and that the potential commercial market for the product was conservatively $176 million dollars.

“We felt like our product had a few advantages over similar competition – other devices only diffuse one product, and they weren’t sensor activated, so they were much more expensive to keep stocked with high-cost pheromones,” said Lindhorst. “Also, our product roadmap featured the integration of smartphone control, data collection and potential AI enhancements down the road would provide us a competitive edge in a growing market.”

From laser cutters to a Poly-Jet 3D printer to an eight-head embroidery machine, the Think[box] has what inventors need to bring form to their ideas.

The team completed its analysis of Lavender Retriever by assessing the path to market. They determined they would need to raise $350,000 to get through the first phase of commercialization, starting with filing provisional patent applications, completing prototyping, securing manufacturing contracts, developing a website and designing a marketing campaign.

Finally, utilizing the staff expertise and capabilities of think[box], the team created a working prototype which they demonstrated as part of their end-of-year presentation.

“For all of our student teams, using a facility like this was invaluable,” said Theofrastous. “By the end of the class, each team created a real, working prototype of their product. This process of design and construction makes the opportunity analysis of both the core technology, as well as its new, innovative elements, much more tangible and real. Going forward, these students will have a strong understanding of not just their own areas of training, but can better see their connection to the broader ecosystem of innovation and entrepreneurship. It’s a little overwhelming at first, but these are very smart students and they did not disappoint.” ■

“The class was such an amazing experience, working not just with the faculty, but also my team members. Each of us brought our own expertise to the table. We relied on each other and most importantly, learned from each other.”

CWRU Law Launches

YEMEN ACCOUNTABILITY PROJECT

To Document
War Crimes
For Future
Prosecution

In Fall 2018, the Henry T. King, Jr. War Crimes Research Office at Case Western Reserve University School of Law launched the Yemen Accountability Project, a student initiative to document and map war crimes and crimes against humanity in the Yemeni Civil War. The project has received funding from alumnus Timothy Geisse (JD '84) and the John F. and Mary A. Geisse Foundation.

Yemen has eclipsed Syria as the world's worst humanitarian crisis, with an estimated 70,000 to 80,000 deaths attributed to the conflict between March 2015 and August 2018. An August 2018 United Nations report concluded that both sides of the conflict have committed numerous war crimes and crimes against humanity. ▶

Laura Graham '21

"We've come a long way in a short time, first building the team and now getting into what will be a multiyear project that will give students great experience while making a difference in the world," said Graham.

The culmination of these products will provide prosecutors in a future tribunal a trial package to undertake an efficient investigation and prosecution of those most responsible for war crimes and crimes against humanity in the Yemeni Civil War.

"Our goal is to build on the success of the Syria Accountability Project, which has produced over 27,000 pages of relevant data, analysis and reports on the Syrian crisis for clients including the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights, The International Criminal Court, The Commission of Inquiry for Syria, the International, Independent, Impartial Mechanism for Syria, and various interested States parties and NGOs," said Johnson. "This research will be invaluable in the international community going forward and I'm so proud of the way our students have responded to this challenge."

The Yemen Crisis and CWRU's Yemen Accountability Project were the subjects of the May 24, 2019 broadcast of "Talking Foreign Policy," the quarterly radio program hosted by CWRU Dean Michael Scharf which is broadcast from Cleveland's NPR station, WCPN 90.3 FM Ideastream. Johnson and Graham were guests on the broadcast, which can be streamed online at law.case.edu/TalkingForeignPolicy.

This project is the latest to be launched by CWRU's War Crimes Research Office, which was established in 2003 and named for the late Nuremberg prosecutor and CWRU Law Professor Henry King. The Office, whose work was nominated for a Nobel Peace Prize by an international prosecutor, has to date assisted in the prosecution of war criminals before the Yugoslavia Tribunal, the Rwanda Tribunal, the Special Court for Sierra Leone, the Cambodia Tribunal, the Lebanon Tribunal, the Iraqi High Court, the Uganda War Crimes Chamber and the piracy courts in Kenya, Mauritius and the Seychelles.

To date, 138 CWRU Law students have undertaken summer or semester-long internships at the international tribunals and six CWRU Law graduates have gone on to careers as prosecutors and legal advisers at the international tribunals. ■

In addition to serving as the executive director of the Yemen Accountability Project, 2L Laura Graham was also a part of the five-person CWRU team that took first place at the Jessup International Law Moot Court Competition in Chicago on February 7-10.

This summer, Graham was selected by the Squire Patton Boggs Foundation for a prestigious fellowship that supported her internship at the International Criminal Court at the Hauge, Netherlands, which has a mandate to prosecute individuals for international crimes of genocide, crimes against humanity, war crimes and crimes of aggression.

Graham's internship involved preparing direct examination questions for the defense witnesses and legal research memoranda for the attorneys defending Dominic Ongwen, a commander of Joseph Kony's Lord's Resistance Army. The case raises the question of whether Ongwen can avoid criminal responsibility for war crimes because he was initially kidnapped, brainwashed and transformed into a child soldier.

"I chose to leave academia and attend Case because a law degree would enable me to have a greater impact in international law," said Graham. "I knew that Case Western's extraordinary international law program would open doors to exciting opportunities in the field."

because they see this as an opportunity to make a difference with respect to the growing humanitarian crisis in Yemen."

Johnson found the perfect student to serve as executive director in 1L Laura Graham, who holds a Ph.D. in sociology and decided to enroll in law school specifically because of her interest in international conflicts. Before coming to Case Western Reserve, she was a professor at Tufts University, teaching courses on genocide, human rights, social justice and conflict resolution. "After years of teaching in a classroom, I decided that I needed to be able to affect change on the ground," said Graham. "I came to Case because the law is the best outlet that I can use and this school has one of the strongest international law programs in the country."

Led by Johnson and Graham, the students working on the Yemen Accountability Project are creating four distinct products

The project, which was modeled after former International Prosecutor David Crane's successful Syrian Accountability Project at Syracuse University, invited students to work in teams in the first comprehensive effort to document atrocities and lay the foundation for successful prosecutions of the responsible parties.

Expecting a handful of volunteers, director of the War Crimes Research Office and former Chief of Prosecutions for the Special Court for Sierra Leone James C. Johnson was overwhelmed by the response. More than 70 students, including LLMs with fluency in Arabic, volunteered to assist in the effort.

"When we put the word out about this last semester, we didn't expect this kind of response," said Johnson. "Despite the workloads and pressures of law school, these students are volunteering their time

Ohio Attorney General AWARDS FUNDING TO human trafficking clinic

The Human Trafficking Program at the Case Western Reserve University School of Law is expanding its community outreach, education and survivor identification with a new round of state funding.

The Ohio Attorney General's Victims of Crime Act Fund (VOCA) recently awarded the initiative $425,000 to continue its support. The clinic represents survivors of both sex and labor trafficking in criminal, civil, juvenile, family and immigration matters.

The initiative is directed by a team of attorneys with dual social work degrees: Melanie GiaMaria and Maya Simek, both lecturers at the law school, and Judith Lipton, the Honorable Blanche E. Krupansky and Frank W. Vargo Jr. Professor of Law who retired this summer.

"The program's goal is to empower survivors to lead lives of meaning and fulfillment," said Lipton. "To further this goal, clients will be offered trauma-informed services from an interdisciplinary team that includes students and faculty from the schools of social work, nursing and medicine."

Targeted outreach is planned for populations most at-risk for trafficking, including teens, incarcerated individuals, those facing homelessness and/or substance-use disorders, foreign nationals and members of the LGBTQ community.

The new round of funding to the law school is among the largest continuation VOCA grants issued.

"The program will continue to provide education and awareness on human-trafficking issues for multi-disciplinary professionals and students in the fields of law, social work, nursing and medicine," said Giamaria, adding that work also is planned with legislators, social service and health care providers, members of law enforcement and the general public.

The clinic also will continue its efforts to include students in the initiative.

"This funding award acknowledges and supports the exceptional work that this program provides to survivors of human trafficking," said Simek. "It also allows us to further collaborate with others locally, regionally, nationally and internationally to assist human-trafficking survivors, penalize traffickers and reduce the demand for those who are being exploited."

Working toward a solution

Ohio is indicative of the human-trafficking problem: The state ranked fourth in the number of sex-trafficking hotline calls in 2016, after California, Texas and Florida, according to the National Human Trafficking Resource Center (NHTRC).

And the numbers keep climbing. Sex and labor trafficking represent a criminal industry worth about $150 billion each year, second only to illegal narcotics, according to NHTRC estimates.

To raise awareness and help counter the scourge, Case Western Reserve partnered with the Collaborative to End Human Trafficking to host the fourth annual Human Trafficking Symposium, called "Human Trafficking Multidisciplinary Symposium: Strategic Responses to the Trafficking Crisis" at the Cleveland Botanical Gardens on Aug. 29. ■

MR. ROBERT ("ROB") G. MCCREARY, III LAW '76

Rob McCreary '76 made a substantial commitment to provide seed money for the start-up of our new MA in Financial Integrity program and is also a regular contributor to the Annual Fund and scholarship funds. "When I graduated, I felt like I could go toe-to-toe with anybody immediately. I was well trained in corporate law, tax law and securities." The school, he said, also readied him for his future endeavors as an investment banker and private equity fund manager—extending his potential for career success beyond law. It's the career preparedness and enterprising spirit that the School of Law instilled in McCreary decades ago that he sees reignited in the curriculum and leadership today. "I really like the Co-Deans' whole approach," McCreary said. "They are unswerving in their commitment to get the best students, and they balanced an innovative curriculum with rigorous Centers of Excellence in areas such as Health Law, International Law and IP-Tech Law. I'm energized. It's something that's inspired me to help in any way I can."

MR. BYRON KRANTZ LAW '62 Naples, FL/Chagrin Falls, OH

Byron Krantz '62, founding partner of Kohrman, Jackson & Krantz LLP, reminisced: "A much needed scholarship allowed me to complete my legal education at Reserve; when it was awarded I pledged to thank those who helped me by providing for future students as they had for me." He contributes regularly to the Annual Fund, Deans' Discretionary Fund, and established the Krantz Family Endowed Scholarship Fund in 2013. "My intent was to help today's students to use their time learning, not stressing over their economic needs." He added, "My recent tenure as Chairman of the Dean's Visiting Committee provided unique insight into our law school, its leadership and direction. We are truly blessed to have Co-Deans with such insight and purpose directing what each day is becoming a more truly remarkable institution."

Keeping Do-It-Yourself Gene Science Safe

CWRU team will provide policy recommendations for balancing safety, innovation

While federal and professional regulatory systems monitor genetic-editing experiments in university and corporate labs, most research conducted outside of these settings lacks formal oversight.

Now, two Case Western Reserve University faculty members have received a two-year grant to provide regulatory recommendations for gene-editing research conducted in non-traditional settings. The aim of this $160,000 grant from the National Human Genome Research Institute at the National Institutes of Health is to protect the public while encouraging creativity and innovation that could benefit many people.

The grant recipients are Distinguished University Professor and Arthur E. Petersilge Professor of Law, Max Mehlman, and Associate Professor of Genetics and Genome Sciences, Ronald Conlon.

"Non-traditional experimentation has a long history and has generated impressive results," said Mehlman. "But individuals who do gene-editing work in unofficial capacities are highly varied. For instance, some reject intellectual property rights and advocate open-source science while others seek to safeguard and commercialize their discoveries. Some document their work on social media while others are secretive. We need a consistent set of policies to address these diverse situations."

Gene editing entails changing an organism's DNA through emerging biotechnologies, such as CRISPR-Cas9. These tools allow researchers to add, remove or modify genetic material at precise locations in the genome, potentially representing cures for serious diseases and improvements to sustainability in agriculture, among other benefits. But genetic editing also has raised ethical and environmental concerns, ranging from worries of ecosystem disruption to fears of designer babies.

Max Mehlman, Arthur E. Petersilge Professor of Law and Law-Medicine Center Director

Those who conduct unofficial gene editing include biology professionals who pursue projects of personal interest in their free time, moonlighters in industry and academic laboratories and amateurs operating out of their homes.

With grant support, the researchers will conduct a detailed literature and statutory review as well as actively monitor social media to provide a comprehensive picture of current and potential unofficial gene-editing practices and capabilities.

For example, it is now possible to buy gene-editing kits online, and some experimenters are injecting themselves in attempts to edit their genes. And while experts believe that most unofficial gene editing is being done only with bacteria and fungi, social media forums contain discussions of working with animals and even humans.

"The stakes are high in two domains," said Conlon. "On one hand, genome editing holds real promise for preventing and treating potentially lethal human diseases such as cystic fibrosis, hemophilia, cancer and heart disease. At the same time, there are potentially grave risks, illustrated by the fact that in 2016 CRISPR-Cas9 was added to the (United States) list of possible weapons of mass destruction—the only biotechnology so listed."

Regulatory options the researchers will explore include establishing licensure and training requirements, mandating the reporting of gene-editing experiments and introducing restrictions on purchases of material and equipment by individuals and commercial entities.

"Let me be clear, our aim is not to stifle creativity," said Mehlman. "Not only won't it work, it could make things worse by driving unofficial gene editing further underground. Our aim is to promote safe and potentially beneficial gene editing outside of official circles." ■

Law school strengthens its network with China with new degree program and five-city tour

In early December, Dean Scharf, Professor Jack Turner, Former Professor Timothy Webster, Professor Jonathan Gordon and Assistant Director of Development John Coorey visited five cities in East and Southeast Asia. They met with prospective students, hosted alumni receptions, discussed new cooperation models with potential partner schools, and presented their latest research. The tour included stops within Beijing, Shanghai, Hangzhou, Chongqing and Bangkok. The law school boasts over 400 alumni working at the highest levels of government, private practice, and academia throughout Asia.

This year, the law school launched a joint LLM in international commercial law and dispute resolution with Southwest University of Political Science and Law in China (SWUPL). The program is taught at both institutions. Students spend their first two years in Chongqing and also take eight intensive courses with visiting Case Western Reserve law faculty. The joint degree program students spend their third year in Cleveland studying advanced commercial law. They also hone their oral advocacy and presentation skills and make valuable connections in the U.S. After three years, students graduate with both a masters degree from SWUPL and a masters degree from CWRU.

"My CWRU LLM enabled me to obtain an in-house counsel position at Siemens China, a regional company of a Fortune 500 multinational corporation. The LLM program taught me critical thinking, equipped me with the necessary technical skills in legal research and writing to excel in practice, and prepared me to successfully pass the New York Bar Exam. And the experience of studying in the family-like atmosphere of CWRU and living in Cleveland helped me to understand western culture, which contributes to my success in an inter-cultural working environment."

Wang Hui (LLM 2005)
Lead Lawyer for the Division of Energy Management and Building Technology, Siemens China

"One of my fondest memories from CWRU was my hands-on legal experience in the Certificates of Qualifications for Employment program, where my classmates and I got to help people with criminal records overcome legal barriers to obtain employment or licensure in certain fields. The work provided me a great opportunity to work with local lawyers, communicate with native speakers with various backgrounds, and use my legal skills to help people in need. Building on that experience, I now make it a habit to participate in volunteer legal activities at least once per month in China."

Gao Kaiwen (LLM 2016)
Associate, King Wood & Mallesons

"Most large national law firms in China and almost every Chinese local office set up by foreign law firms would prefer to hire candidates with an overseas LLM like the one offered by CWRU. After I received my LLM degree from CWRU and returned to China, I represented a lot of Chinese companies in their M&A transactions with U.S. companies, privatization transactions from the U.S. listing market, and direct outbound investment to the U.S. Without the doors the CWRU LLM opened for me and the knowledge I gained through the CWRU LLM, it would have been impossible for me to have achieved that."

MR. HOWARD J. FREEDMAN LAW '70

Howard J. Freedman '70 has given generously to the Law School, building on his family's legacy of philanthropy to the University. "Even 50 years on, the memories of the classrooms of young, rising-star professors such as Lew Katz and Ron Coffey are vivid. The energy and intensity that the faculty brought to work was contagious and edifying," Friedman recalls. "Those memories, and the outstanding leadership at CWRU under President Snyder and at the School of Law under Co-Deans Berg and Scharf, are the inspiration for my support. I hope that, through my support and that of other alumni and friends, the School of Law will continue to grow and thrive as a renowned center for legal education and scholarship."

MS. MICHELLE YA-LING GON LAW '85 Shanghai, CHINA

Named one of the top 30 attorneys in China, Michele Gon '85 established the Michelle Gon Endowed International Business Law Scholarship. She was the first JD student with a foreign LLB degree. "At that time, the School of Law was not very 'international' yet. For example, there was no LLM program for foreign students," she recalls. Noting that today there are over 150 foreign students studying law at CWRU, Gon says, "I hope to make my token of appreciation by promoting the school and its international law program."

From the Chicken Farm to the Courthouse

Vito Giannola put poultry farming behind to become a lawyer and accept a judicial clerkship

"The Farmer is the Man That Feeds Them All," says the protest song from America's Progressive Era of the 1890s. It has been recorded by Pete Seeger, Ry Cooder, and Fiddlin' John Carson with Moonshine Kate. There is probably no song about how the farmer goes to law school and gets elected editor-in-chief of the law review. Not yet. When that song is written, though, its inspiration may well be Vito Giannola of Case Western Reserve University School of Law's class of 2020.

Giannola was raised in Oxford, Michigan, forty miles north of Detroit, in a blue-collar family. Growing up there, he worked part-time manual jobs in construction throughout his high school years and during summer breaks from college at Northern Michigan University, in the Upper Peninsula. Giannola spent a great deal of time in the outdoors up there in the U.P.: "I learned a lot about myself while I was in the woods," he recalls.

Law school began to beckon in his sophomore year of college. "I appreciated how law was integrated with everything," he says, and he is comfortable with the rigors of analytical thought that occupy the legal mind. Still, he decided to take a year off after college to contemplate what he really wanted to do.

So he returned to a job he had previously done part-time in Oxford, as a chicken farmer – building coops, shooting predator raccoons with a 22 caliber rifle, and doing all the other tasks necessary for poultry to survive and thrive.

But these were not just any chickens.

The Oxford farm where Giannola worked is owned by a well-known art patron and collector, Gary Wasserman, and the cross-bred poultry operation (known as the "Cosmopolitan Chicken Project," or "CCP") is designed to "foster a dialogue on national identity and the interdependence of different cultures, species and the environment," according to the Wasserman Project's website. Today the Cosmopolitan chicken carries DNA from 20 different international breeds, and "lives longer, is more fertile, is less susceptible to disease, and exhibits less aggressive behavior."

Giannola enjoyed his time with the CCP, and his workmates there. At the same time, he also realized that farming was not an occupation he wanted to pursue long-term. He used his experience, rather, as motivation, and a conceptual stepping stone, to his real calling -- to the bar.

He chickened out, one might say -- in a good way.

He was offered a generous scholarship at Case Western Reserve University which made his dream of becoming a lawyer possible. Like many people who take time off between college and graduate school, Giannola has particularly cherished the law school experience — even the inevitable needling he took in Professor Raymond Ku's Constitutional Law class about the Supreme Court's 1935 decision in Schechter Poultry Corp. v. United States, the infamous "Sick Chicken" case.

He is especially interested in appellate work and has participated in both the Dunmore Moot Court competition and the Appellate Litigation Clinic. "I like the intellectual challenge that arguing an appeal presents," he says. "In the proper case, you can argue both law and policy and help shape society within a legal framework."

"Surrounded by a great group of people," as he says, Giannola is looking forward to his upcoming term as editor-in-chief of the law review (to which he was elected unanimously) and this year's theme issue, centered on the 50th anniversary of the establishment of the Environmental Protection Agency.

Giannola has accepted a judicial clerkship, to commence after graduation, with Judge Alice Batchelder of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit. "We kind of clicked," he says, speaking of his previous experience with her as a judicial extern. "She is an educator, supportive and outgoing." Next to a Supreme Court judicial clerkship, there is no more prestigious position for a graduating law student.

Giannola is genuinely well-liked around the law school, and no wonder. As his Contracts professor, Juliet Kostritsky, relates, on one occasion, a potential law student visiting the school with her parents was looking for someone to give them a last-minute tour. Giannola saw them looking lost, introduced himself, and volunteered to be their guide. Wherever his legal career takes him, that kind of helpful attitude, and a down-to-earth personality, will surely serve him well.

Now that he's on the cusp of a promising legal career, how does he regard his other, pre-law school work? "I'm very grateful for all of the opportunities I've had," he says, "and I'm grateful that all of that experience now seems to be coming to fruition. I'm excited for what the future holds."

Even now, there's no doubt that Giannola will be a persuasive advocate. That potential student that he squired around on her visit to the law school? She did, in fact, end up enrolling at the law school; she's now starting her second year. ■

"I like the intellectual challenge that arguing an appeal presents. In the proper case, you can argue both law and policy, and help shape society within a legal framework."

Winarsky says, "I am proud of my degree and my association with Case." In explaining his bequest, Winarsky says, "An attorney's highest duty is to the client, to justice, human rights and a civil society of laws. I like what the school is doing to promote these. I want the school to continue to be positively engaged in Ohio and with the larger world. And I want the school to continue to increase opportunities for those who might not otherwise have access to them. Without my contribution this may not be possible. This is why I give; you should too—send in your check and note: 'Lew sent me!'"

Driving Change

James Chen '91 is helping Rivian reach new levels of technological innovation with Electric Adventure Vehicles™

Weekdays, James Chen '91 serves as Vice President of Public Policy at Rivian Automotive, LLC, where he spends his time advocating for the rollout of the automotive company's futuristic Electric Adventure Vehicles™ — high performance, all electric pick-up trucks and SUVs.

Then on weekends in the winter, Chen pursues his other driving passion: working as a member of the National Ski Patrol. He dons his Ski Patrol uniform and heads to Liberty Mountain in Carroll Valley, PA. As Assistant Patrol Director, Chen vigilantly provides aid to injured skiers and helps ward off mishaps before they happen.

Helping people has been a long-time priority for Chen. At Case Western Reserve School of Law, Chen studied international trade and criminal law. At one point, he says, "I wanted to be a prosecutor, representing victims of crime." He credits Case Western Reserve with "honing my ability to be a critical thinker," as well as giving him "the training and discipline to be both an attorney and a business executive."

After graduating, he took a position through the honors hire program with the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, as an attorney-advisor first with the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act Enforcement Division, and later the Toxics and Pesticides Enforcement Division.

Chen spent the ensuing 15 years in the environmental practice divisions at two firms, Hogan & Hartson and Crowell & Moring LLP, before joining Tesla in August 2010, where he served as Vice President of Regulatory Affairs and Deputy General Counsel.

"Tesla was the ideal intersection of my training, my experience, my interests and my desire to do good in the world," Chen said. He was instrumental in guiding Tesla through a sea of regulations to ensure the safety and efficiency of its cars and facilities, which included promoting zero emissions and striving towards zero landfill, respectively.

Then in 2018, Chen joined Rivian, which he describes as "having many parallels with how Tesla developed — a dynamic CEO, incredible product and technology, incredible infrastructure, and the investment — all coming together."

Chen's role entails both regulatory and policy areas. He spends much of his time educating lawmakers, particularly at the state level, about the promise of electric vehicles, which he emphasizes are U.S.-invested, U.S.-developed, reduce dependency on oil, improve the environment and create new jobs.

"There is nothing but good in getting this technology out there," Chen said. "This is how lawyers can really make a difference, and how a law degree can help society become a better place."

Next year, the automaker's first vehicles will be in production, and Rivian will sell them directly to consumers, similar to Tesla's strategy. By focusing on all Electric Adventure Vehicles™, Rivian is breaking into the market of trucks and SUVs, which are 60 percent of all new vehicle sales. This is why it is critical, Chen explains, that an American company is focusing on this area.

Still, electric vehicles comprise only about 1 percent of the overall U.S. fleet. Chen believes the industry is at a "tipping point," and part of his job is also making sure federal tax credits for electric vehicles stay in place, and to fight intense lobbying for adverse policies from the oil and gas industry.

On the regulatory side, Chen also works to ensure the vehicles are not just compliant, but exceed expectations for safety and performance.

"Here's the great thing. Everything in law school — the training I received, the degree, the connections — that's what opened the doors for me to have the career that I have. There have been a few bumps along the road. But there's no question that I am thrilled and honored to be pushing the mission at Rivian. It is an exciting time." ■

The Russia-United States Legal Education Foundation is evolving the bench and bar in Russia, one student at a time.

Engaging classroom discussions and an expectation to contribute thoughts, opinions and ideas—this type of learning environment was a departure from what Arsenia Golubenkova traditionally experienced in college-level courses at home in St. Petersburg, Russia.

But as an exchange student at Case Western Reserve University School of Law, sponsored by the Russia-United States Legal Education Foundation (RUSLEF), Golubenkova experienced a fresh perspective of law.

“The process of education is so much more involving, and it was something new for me,” says Golubenkova, 23, relating that in Russia, “we are allowed to ask a question, but that is not happening often.” Courses are lecture-based—and more significantly, the practice of law is quite different.

Sidney Picker Jr., a professor emeritus in international law and trade at Case Western University law school and his wife Jane M. Picker, professor emerita at Cleveland-Marshall College of Law of Cleveland State University, recognized an opportunity to develop a rule-of-law legal culture in the rising generation of Russia’s bench and bar in the early 1990s, following the dissolution of the Soviet Union. Their vision was to create a program that ultimately would help integrate Russia into the worlds’ economic, political and social arenas.

The Pickers formed partnerships with two Russian law schools—one in Volgograd and the other in St. Petersburg—and received initial funding through the former United States Information Agency (USIA). Then with funding from NAFSA: Association of International Educators, a student exchange resulted. Case Western Reserve and Cleveland State then added a fully accredited summer school program in St. Petersburg, which mixed American and Russian students together.

By the end of the millennium, USIA ceased to exist. Without funding, the program ceased. At this time, the Pickers retired, becoming emeritus professors at their respective law schools, and formed RUSLEF as a nonprofit Ohio corporation to continue the most effective portions of the program. The Pickers raise funds for sponsoring Russian law students at American Bar Association-accredited law schools across the country, covering the payment of their non-tuition expenses. In turn, participating law schools waive tuition.

Over the years, the program has succeeded because of the Pickers’ thoughtful selection of exchange students via personal interviews and transcript reviews, and the sheer nature of those students involved.

“The Russians are very gregarious people who are rich in literature and they love to argue, but they never had an opportunity to do that in a law school class because in those days, Russian courses were only lectures,” Sidney Picker said. “When we brought Russians into our American classrooms, they were delighted and participated actively.”

The program is designed to create ambassadors—to instill a rule of law culture in exchange students during their yearlong experience, so they can return to Russia and influence their colleagues to embrace it.

Sidney Picker Jr. (left) with Arsenia Golubenkova, a law student from Russia who studied law at Case Western Reserve University in 2018-19

Nearly 30 years later, the Pickers’ vision is coming to fruition in Russia. They visit annually, holding reunions with alumni of the exchange program, and visiting former students in their homes and workplaces. Gradually, student by student, RUSLEF is building a generation of modern law practitioners who are equipped for the global economy.

Now, there is a core of more than 100 former students who are running firms, working in government positions, climbing the ranks of international corporations and law practices.

“Their influence has spread into law schools as well,” Jane Picker said. “The curriculum used to be controlled by a central authority, but now some schools are developing courses on their own.”

Simply put, “They are making an impact,” she said.

Building Relationships

The opportunity to make an impact is exactly what drew Golubenkova into law as a 17-year-old, moving from a small Russian town called Cherepovets to St. Petersburg to attend university. Her focus is intellectual property (IP) law.

“With IP, your clients are inventors, artists and authors, and they are full of new ideas and energy—this fresh innovation and inspiration,” Golubenkova said. “That’s the area of law where I feel like I can really do something to make positive change.”

During her year at law school in 2018-2019, Golubenkova ingrained herself in the classroom dynamics and American culture. She rented a room with a local Cleveland family, who included her in holidays and family outings. On campus, she reveled in the discussion.

“I feel very comfortable in Cleveland and in the United States, in general,” she said.

That’s the intention. The Pickers go to great lengths to treat every student like a member of their own family, hosting them at their home and constantly keeping in touch.

“We love the students—we personalize it for them,” Sidney Picker said. “We are extremely close to them and want to make sure they also stay in touch with each other, because through those connections they can make a difference.”

The Pickers’ email inbox fills with correspondence from former students. “They are tremendously loyal to us and the program, and some will come to the United States on business or for pleasure and visit with us,” he said.

This relationship building is a key aspect of the program and its power to generate valued connections between U.S. and Russian attorneys and educators. Exposure to how a rule-based legal culture works helps provide a foundation for establishing a stable economic and social system.

Developing a program with Russia was also important to the Pickers, who recognized a lack of partnership between U.S. and Russian educational institutions. In fact, RUSLEF was novel and still the largest exchange program bringing Russian law students here to study. Sidney Picker reflects back on the second year of the program, in 1994, when there were RUSLEF exchange students at the law schools of Case Western Reserve and Cleveland State, where Jane Picker taught.

"We had more Russian students at Case and CSU than the rest of the country had in total, and more than half of all Russian students in the U.S. were together in Cleveland," he said.

Inspiring Change

The RUSLEF program is a passion project for the Pickers, who hand-pick exchange students and spearhead all the funding to arrange exchange programs at universities across the country. For example, this year's students were placed at George Washington Law School in Washington, D.C.; Tulane Law School in New Orleans; CWRU in Cleveland; University of Illinois in Champaign-Urbana; University of Maine in Portland; McGeorge Law School in Sacramento; and the University of Arkansas in Fayetteville.

The Pickers arrange for special experiences for the students. "When Ruth Bader Ginsburg agreed to give our students a private tour and meeting in her chambers, we were delighted—and it was so successful, she agreed to do it again next year," Sidney Picker says.

Meanwhile, St. Petersburg State University in St. Petersburg, Russia, awarded the Pickers with honorary doctoral degrees for their academic accomplishments. They were the only Americans to receive such a designation.

Jane Picker said the program has received tremendous support from so many, and at Case Western Reserve, adjunct faculty member and attorney Joel Levin, of Levin & Associates, provided his office to assist with the financial matters of RUSLEF.

"He was a tremendous help in getting us organized," she said.

The Pickers, now in their eighties, continue their devotion to the program they founded. "Hopefully, we are helping change people's lives and to make some kind of small difference in the world," Sidney Picker said. "In two or three generations, the Russian practice of law will be much different than the way it is today. It's gradual change, student by student, person by person."

For Golubenkova, the opportunity to be part of this gradual change has meant the world. "I am so grateful for this opportunity, which has definitely changed my life," she said. ■

JOHN P. KELLOGG, ESQ LAW '80 Shaker Heights, OH

John P. Kellogg '80 has had an exciting career as an entertainment attorney, representing such artists as Eddie Levert, The O'Jays, LSG, Stat Quo, and G-Dep. He went on to Chair the Music Business Management Department at the Berklee College of Music in Boston, MA, and was inducted into the Black Entertainment and Sports Lawyers Association Hall of Fame. Kellogg established the John Wragg Kellogg Prize Fund in 2014 to honor his father who was also an alumnus of our school (class of 1948). The Prize goes to the top minority 3L student every year. He says: "As a second generation CWRU Law School graduate, I am glad to support the John W. Kellogg Prize, named in honor of my dad, which supports the inclusion of minority students at our alma mater. I am grateful that his dedication to law, civil rights and politics is recognized through the awarding of a yearly prize that assists young students in the pursuit of their goals."

MR. GARY L. BRYENTON LAW '65

Gary L. Bryenton '65 is former Executive Partner of BakerHostetler Law Firm and served as Chair of the Law School's Campaign Committee. In explaining his generous campaign donations, both to the Annual Fund and for a scholarship to support the Editor-in-Chief of the Law Review, Bryenton said: "The CWRU Law School has been, and continues to be, a source of great inspiration for me, and as such has guided me through a career of more than five decades of practice at the highest level. The faculty is genuinely committed to assisting the Students to do their best, and the Co-Deans are equally committed to the students and the faculty. Giving back permits me to honor my source of inspiration, while at the same time helping make it possible for others to develop their own."

HON. NATALIE K. FINN LAW '72 Anchorage, AK

After graduating from the law school in 1972, Natalie Finn flew to Alaska to spend a year as a Vista Volunteer. That year turned into a 47-year adventure in the northern frontier. She worked as a prosecutor in Fairbanks, then as a District Court Judge for multiple decades in Anchorage, and is presently serving as a pro tem Superior Court Judge, presiding over cases in communities large and small around the state. A generous donor to the law school, Judge Finn says: "I give to the law school because I am so grateful for an education that has given me tools to pursue a challenging and fascinating career in Alaska over several decades. It has been such an adventure."

Case Western Reserve climbs to #1 spot in Ohio February bar exam for 2019

The Ohio Supreme Court issued the results of the February 2019 bar exam, and Case Western Reserve University School of Law was the #1 Ohio law school in both first time and overall bar pass rates.

The law school has had similar strong results in recent years, including the #1 bar pass rate for first time takers in the July 2017 Ohio Bar Exam and the #2 overall pass rate in the July 2018 Ohio Bar.

Ann and David Brennan with their children, Elizabeth, John, Kathleen, and Nancy.

David L. Brennan graduated from Case Western Reserve University School of Law in 1957 and went on to become one of the most successful lawyers and generous philanthropists in the state of Ohio. The Brennan Chaired Professorship at CWRU law school bears his name. He passed away in October 2018. Here, Dean Jessica Berg talked with David's wife, Ann, about this incredible alumnus.

Q: You met David and then married him in 1957 and had four children (Elizabeth, John, Kathleen, and Nancy). When you first met, what surprised you the most about him?

David wrote poetry. I never expected him to be a poet — here's this great big guy, and he's very business-like. However, he wrote some wonderfully romantic poems to me. It was really sweet.

Q: Can you tell us what led David to law school here?

The story David liked to tell about why he went to Case Western Reserve was that he had been working at Bellows Valve Air — a company that created neon signs. He was working all day, and then going to the University of Akron law school at night. David decided rather than sleeping through law school, maybe he should go during the day, so he applied to Case Western Reserve University. His mother had $800, which was the tuition at the time. He had his transcript, and he showed up on the first day of class and the Dean's secretary took him right in and put him in the class.

Q: I read that David got his entrepreneurial start while in law school, working as a bookkeeper for local physicians. Did you have any inkling just how successful he would be at that time?

I always knew David would be successful. David had been told he probably would not live beyond 50 because of inherited heart problems that his father had. As a result, David was always in a hurry. That made him look for stuff to do whenever he could, and do as much as he could. He never slowed down.

Q: Many successful entrepreneurs are known for wearing their signature hats. David was known for wearing a white Stetson cowboy hat. Can you tell us the story behind that?

That happened as a result of our company Brenlin Group purchasing the former LTV steel plant, in Gadsden, Alabama, out of bankruptcy. The court ruled that we could make the purchase. We all flew down to Gadsden, and David was met at the airport by a reporter. This reporter asked, "Well now Mr. Brennan, how do you feel coming into town and wearing your black hat and taking all these jobs away," because one of the stipulations was that we didn't have to abide by the union contract. David answered, "Oh, no, no, no, you don't get it. I'm wearing a 'white hat', I'm coming into town and saving 1,500 jobs." Then approximately a week or so later, he received a box. He opened up the box and inside was a white Stetson, and it was a gift from a businessman in Gadsden. He wrote, "Mr. Brennan, we agree, you are saving 1,500 jobs, and you are wearing a white hat and here it is."

Q: You and David have been extraordinary philanthropists. You contributed tens of millions of dollars in Ohio from the rebuilding of downtown Akron, to the United Way, to St. Vincent-St. Mary and Summa Health. David and you also contributed over $1 million to Case Western Reserve University. The Brennan contributions include the Center for Science and Discovery at the College of Arts and Sciences, the Presidential Fund, the Trustee Fund as well as generous support to the School of Law with an endowed professorship. Can you tell us about your joint philosophy of giving?

We never sat down and talked about it; we just gave because somebody asked. As far as the giving goes there has always been a connection between our involvement and our giving. For example, Summa Health — we've had our medical care there forever. The Elms — I went to school there. St. V's — David went to school there. Our giving followed what our interests are and our belief that it's important for this geographic area that we have things like the arts, which make a place more livable.

Q: David was quoted in the 1990s as wanting to lead a "crusade in education." Can you tell us what inspired the many years of work with charter schools?

We had a number of industrial plants that we had purchased from Firestone as Firestone was divesting itself of different things. Particularly in Spartanburg, South Carolina, we had to start doing statistical data analysis, which was required because the automobile companies, whom we were supplying, had such low tolerances for differences in machine parts. Well in order to do statistical data analysis, you had to know some arithmetic. We realized that many employees had difficulty with simple math. Then we began to investigate a little more and found out that a lot of our employees, good employees, couldn't even read. Along with my friend Sally Coens, we set up learning centers in our various plants, and would give time off to people to learn. During the summer their families could learn and that was the beginning.

The reason we started using computers was we began to realize the size of the education problem. I had done some volunteer work with Project Learn here in Akron. It's a wonderful program, but it teaches one person to read one at a time. Well, if you think about it, people are going to continue to be illiterate before you get to the end of the line. That was a time when computers were beginning to come in, and then there was the Plato software that was starting, it was in the late '80s. It made sense to us and we started using computers to scale up educational offerings.

"A picture is worth a thousand words! While David may have been known as a gruff, hard charging, no nonsense industrialist, he was a man with a clear vision of the future and fierce compassion for his fellow man. His vision was straightforward and direct like David. Simply put, he had an unbridled desire to make the world a better place for everyone. David was defined by his zealous love of making things happen — learning far more from his failures than his successes. David was a true friend, respected for his leadership, commitment and passion. His white cowboy hat came to represent everything good about David Brennan — a man larger than life with a broad smile and a very big heart."

— Jack T. Diamond ('83),
President of Brennan, Manna & Diamond LLC

And then I went to a White House event hosted by former First Lady Barbara Bush. The speaker was Peter Du Pont, and he was talking about the fact that as a country we needed school choice. He explained it as the "Buick Tax." If there were only one kind of car sold in the country, what happens to it eventually? The quality goes down. We could see that the quality in our public schools unfortunately had gone down, because there wasn't any competition. When I came home, I talked about what I heard with David, and then he began reading a lot about it, and that was what really led him into being such a proponent of school choice. Particularly for the poor, because they, unfortunately, had so little opportunity to make any kind of a choice. That was where it all began.

Q: What would David say was his proudest accomplishment?

I think his proudest accomplishment he felt, especially toward the end, was the fact that there were thousands of Ohio kids who had a high school diploma because they'd gone to school because of his activities.

Q: If he were to share sage words with our students and alumni, what advice do you think he would give?

I think he would say to love the law, protect it. Beyond that, the main thing is always plan. Don't just plan for the downside, which some people are very good at, but plan for the upside. Because sometimes, when you're successful, that's when more problems start than when you're not successful. ■

Teams triumph at national moot court and mock trial competitions and win top speaker awards

JESSUP INTERNATIONAL LAW MOOT COURT COMPETITION

The Jessup team first place and captured four of the top 10 speaker awards at the Jessup International Law Moot Court Competition in Chicago on February 7-10.

The team went 4-0 in the preliminary rounds, beating the University of Chicago, Chicago Kent, Iowa University and Marquette University. The team then defeated St. Louis University in the quarter finals, Wayne State University in the semi finals, and Loyola Law School in the finals, advancing to the International Rounds, March 31-April 6 in Washington, DC, for the second consecutive year and the eighth time in the past 15 years.

In an extraordinary sweep, all four of the team's oralists won top speaker awards for the first time in the law school's history. Andrea Shaia, then a 2L, was the 9th best speaker, Megan MacCallum, also a 2L last year, was the 5th best speaker. Taylor Frank, a 2019 graduate, was the 3rd best speaker, and Alex Lilly, also a 2019 graduate, was the 2nd best speaker in the competition.

CASE CLASSIC MOCK TRIAL COMPETITION

CWRU teams captured second and fourth place at the Case Classic, the first Mock Trial competition of 2018-19. The competition was composed of 20 teams from law schools from Ohio, Pennsylvania, Alabama and Virginia.

CWRU's team of Morgan Austin, Tiana Bohanon, Alex Haddad and Joe Shell was the tournament's runner up. The other team of Stephanie McNeal, Justin Mackin, Lysette Roman and Allison Smith came in fourth place. The teams are coached by Mike Gabelman '12, who is the Assistant Public Defender for Lake County.

International Criminal Court Moot Court Team (L to R) Adrianna Velazquez-Martinez, Jazmine Edwards, Caroline Ford, Kelsey Smith and Gloria Neilson

INTERNATIONAL CRIMINAL COURT MOOT COURT TEAM

On March 16-17, the International Criminal Court Moot Court team, consisting of (during the last academic year) Kelsey Smith 3L, Adrianna Velazquez-Martinez 2L, Caroline Ford 1L, Gloria Neilson 2L, and Jazmine Edwards 1L, competed against two dozen teams from across the continent at the North American Rounds of the ICC Competition at Pace Law School in New York.

The competition involved the legal issues of whether unilateral use of force against chemical weapons facilities constitutes a crime of aggression and whether a law professor who provides the government one-sided legal advice can be held criminally responsible for aiding and abetting aggression.

Based on its high briefs and oral argument scores in three preliminary rounds, the Case Western Reserve team advanced to the semi-finals, where it lost a close round to Temple Law School. The Case Western Reserve team was coached by Professors Michael Benza and Cassandra Robertson.

Vis team members (L to R) 2Ls Teresa Azzam and Kathleen Burke and 1Ls Kristina Aiad-Toss, Emma Green and Jamison King

CWRU VIS INTERNATIONAL ARBITRATION TEAM

The Vis International Commercial Arbitration Team took second place in the competition hosted by Loyola Law School in Chicago from February 15-17, and Teresa Azzam won the competition's Best Oralist award.

The Vis team was composed of (as of last academic year) 3L Douglas Pilawa, 2Ls Teresa Azzam and Kathleen Burke, and 1Ls Kristina Aiad-Toss, Emma Green, and Jamison King. The team is coached by Professor Katy Mercer and former Professor Timothy Webster.

NATIONAL MOOT COURT COMPETITION

Law students John Gardner and Sarah Lucey advanced to the final round of the regional National Moot Court competition in Cleveland last November, earning a berth in the national rounds in New York City in January. The bench included the newly-elected Justice of the Ohio Supreme Court, Melody Stewart, who is also a former Director of Student Affairs at CWRU School of Law. Professors Katy Mercer and Tim Duff coached the team to victory. The second CWRU team was comprised of Jamie Lamson-Buscho, Andrew Condiles and Rachel Andelman.

At the national competition, Lucey and Gardner were defeated in a close match in the first round, but prevailed with a win in the second round.

BLACK LAW STUDENT ASSOCIATION MOCK TRIAL

The Black Law Students Association (BLSA) Mock Trial Team took 3rd place out of 67 teams in March during the National BLSA Mock Trial Competition in Little Rock, Arkansas. The students that competed in Little Rock were (as of last academic year) Allison Smith 3L, Alicia Hampton 2L, McClellon Cox 3L and Demari Muff 2L. The team also consisted of Fatimah Smith 1L, Lauryn Durham 1L, and Candice Green 3L, who assisted the team in their preparation.

The team was coached by the Honorable Summit County Magistrate Brett Hammond and Cuyahoga County Assistant Prosecuting Attorney Ike Ekeke '16.

Earlier in the year, the BLSA Mock Trial team competed in the Constance Baker Motley Mock Trial Competition in Chicago February. Out of 15 registered teams, the team came in third and earned the right to represent the Midwest Region in March at the national competition.

In Chicago, Muff earned the award for best advocate among all competitors in the competition.

FIRST-YEAR LAW STUDENTS

Inspired BY ELECTIVES EXPERIENCE

First-year law students are now taking electives during their first year of law school. The program began in spring 2019 as a way to engage students in specialty areas before they get further into their academic careers.

Each 1L student takes two, one-credit, electives in the spring semester. The options for 2019 were

- Artifact Law
- Bioethics and Law
- Civil Litigation Practicum
- Criminal Law Practice: Contemporary Issues
- Courts, Public Policy, and Social Change
- International Law: Fundamentals
- Legal Analysis and Problem-Solving
- Professionalism: Competencies of a Successful Lawyer

The response from students has been overwhelmingly positive. Here's what some of our students said about the experience last year:

"I chose artifact law because it was unique. I really enjoyed it because we got to learn about abandoned shipwrecks and who had ownership rights to them."

— Kristin Lyons

"I really enjoyed taking bioethics with Dean Berg; she is wonderful and super engaging and it was great to get to learn something outside of our standard curriculum."

— Alexandria McKenna

"Some of the other qualities of professionalism include civility, good judgment, honor and commitment. Overall, the point of the professional ethics class is to instill in you that professional perspective to offer you a good start as a lawyer."

— George Kamanda

"We talked about all of the famous cases that everyone's heard of since elementary school, like Brown v. Board of Education and everything that led up to that. Professor Jonathan Entin really knows his stuff and he has an incredibly fascinating amount of background information that you're not going to get from the cases."

— Lindsey Leonard, about her courts, public policy and social change course.

Importance of law annual fund dollars

The annual fund is particularly important to the law school because it directly supports our students every day. A robust annual fund allows us to offer financial assistance to our students; this year more than 90% of our students will benefit from your support! And, unlike many other law schools, 100% of our annual fund dollars directly support our students through financial assistance for tuition, moot court travel, and public interest fellowships. Gifts of every amount absolutely make a difference for our students.

What can my law annual fund gift do?

Combined with gifts from your classmates, these funds provide travel support for students interviewing for jobs out of state. 91% of the Class of 2018 obtained jobs in 26 states and DC by the reporting deadline.

$1,000

Allows us to provide books for a 1L incoming student. 74% of the incoming class in 2019 received this book support.

$500

Can cover expenses for our award-winning moot court teams as they travel both nationally and internationally. These teams provide our students with invaluable experiences through real-life litigation challenges and allows them to develop their courtroom skills.

$2,500

Can provide funding for a student to gain preparation for practice through a summer internship in the public interest or social justice area. Each year more than 50 law students take unpaid summer jobs with government agencies and nonprofits and your annual fund gift can help cover basic expenses while they gain practical experience.

When should I support the law annual fund?

Gifts to the Case Western Reserve University School of Law annual fund are accepted at any time. The fund operates on a fiscal year that starts July 1 and ends June 30; so making a gift early in the cycle saves you from being solicited multiple times and saves the law school money. Many donors prefer to make their gift at the end of the calendar year to take advantage of tax benefits.

You can give online anytime at giving.case.edu/law or by calling the office of Alumni Relations & Development at 1-800-492-3308.

PROFESSOR POLLIS APPOINTED AS CHAIR OF OHIO SUPREME COURT COMMISSION

The Ohio Supreme Court has appointed Professor Andrew Pollis, an experienced civil-litigation attorney, as the chair of its Commission on the Rules of Practice and Procedure.

The appointment will last through December 2020 and may be extended by an additional two years.

Pollis has been a member of the commission since 2015, serving on its Appellate Rules, Civil Rules and Evidence Rules Committees. He was counsel to the Appellate Rules Committee for several years before 2015. His appointment as chair of the commission follows a year of service as chair of the Appellate Rules Committee.

"It is an honor to be appointed as chair," Pollis said. "I'm looking forward to leading the commission through the important process of evaluating potential rule amendments that we will recommend to the court this year. We have a lot to achieve in 2019."

The commission is responsible for submitting proposed rule amendments to the Ohio Supreme Court, which is responsible for the rules and procedures that govern Ohio's courts. The Supreme Court relies on more than a dozen commission and boards to help it regulate the general practice of law. The Commission on the Rules of Practice and Procedure Commission is one of 11 formed to provide quasi-ministerial authority on behalf of the Ohio Supreme Court.

At Case Western Reserve, Pollis teaches in the Civil Litigation Clinic, where he supervises students on a wide variety of civil matters that involve the rights of low-income individuals. He also teaches evidence and coordinates the law school's appellate practice program. He is an expert in appellate-law issues and is the co-author of the last 11 editions of Ohio Appellate Practice (Thomson/West). His scholarly writings focus on issues of appellate and civil procedure, the legal profession and evidence. ■

TWO FACULTY MEMBERS CITED BY U.S. SUPREME COURT IN SPRING 2019

JONATHAN ADLER

Justice Neil Gorsuch's opinion concurring in the judgment in Kisor v. Wilkie twice cited Professor Jonathan H. Adler's article "Auer Evasions," from the Georgetown Journal of Law & Public Policy. In Kisor, the Supreme Court considered whether to maintain so-called Auer deference, under which courts are to defer to reasonable federal agency interpretations of their own regulations when those regulations are ambiguous.

Professor Adler's article argued that Auer deference facilitates the evasion of administrative law norms, and was cited by Justice Gorsuch. The Supreme Court, in an opinion by Justice Elena Kagan, upheld Auer deference subject to a series of new constraints designed to limit abuse of the doctrine. Judge Gorsuch's separate opinion, joined by Justices Thomas, Alito and Kavanaugh, called for eliminating Auer deference altogether.

Kisor v. Wilkie marked the second time Professor Adler's work was cited by the Supreme Court. Professors Adler's scholarship was previously cited in an opinion by Chief Justice John Roberts in City of Arlington v. FCC. ■

CASSANDRA ROBERTSON

Professor Cassandra Robertson's article "The Right to Appeal," which was published in the North Carolina Law Review in 2013, was cited in Justice Sonia Sotomayor's majority opinion in the recently published case, Garza v. Idaho.

In the case, the court reversed the Idaho Supreme Court's decision involving an inmate who claimed his public defender was ineffective after he failed to heed the inmate's request to file a notice of appeal. According to Justice Sotomayor's opinion, a plea agreement's appeal waiver can not cover every situation; a defendant may, for example, want to challenge whether the plea agreement was voluntarily made.

In her article, Robertson had urged the U.S. Supreme Court to acknowledge the right to appeal. Robertson's research has also been cited by judges on the supreme courts of Kansas, California and Oregon. Sotomayor's opinion marks her first U.S. Supreme Court citation, placing her in the rarefied company of the most elite law scholars in the country. ■

LAW FACULTY HONORED FOR SCHOLARSHIP AND SERVICE

Dean Michael Scharf and Professor Raymond Ku

Dean Jessica Berg and Professor Cassandra Robertson

Professor Jessie Hill and Adjunct Professor Marvin Sicherman

At the law school's annual celebration of faculty scholarship and service on May 9, 2019, two faculty members were designated Distinguished Research Scholars, and three others were honored with special awards and prizes, while faculty members were lauded for publishing books in 2018-2019.

The law school established the Laura B. Chisolm Distinguished Research Scholar and the Oliver C. Schroeder Jr. Distinguished Research Scholar honorifics as a way to recognize rising stars on their way to chaired professorships and honor two of the law school's most impactful former professors. At the annual celebration, Co-Deans Berg and Scharf announced that Professor Raymond Ku has been designated the Laura B. Chisolm Distinguished Research Scholar, and Professor Aaron Perzanowski has been designated the Oliver C. Schroeder Jr. Distinguished Research Scholar.

The law school established the Faculty Distinguished Research Prize to recognize professors whose published works during the preceding three years demonstrate extraordinary scholarly achievement based on their impact on academic discourse, law and policy. The Co-Deans announced that the recipient of the 2019 Distinguished Research Prize is Cassandra Burke Robertson, the John Deaver Drinko — BakerHostetler Professor of Law and Director of the Center for Professional Ethics. In the past three years, Robertson has published in the Emory Law Journal, Connecticut Law Review, Case Western Reserve Law Review, Florida Law Review and New York University Law Review. Her scholarship was also recently cited in the U.S. Supreme Court's majority opinion in Garza v. Idaho.

The law school established the Distinguished Service Prize to recognize professors whose service during the preceding two years demonstrates extraordinary dedication to the school. The Co-Deans announced that the recipient of the 2019 Faculty Service Prize is Jessie Hill, the Judge Ben C. Green Professor of Law who has served

Professor Carmen Naso with Dean Jessica Berg

Professor Lew Katz

Professor Judy Lipton

Professor Jean McQuillan with Dean Michael Scharf

as the law school's associate dean of academic affairs for the past four years.

Every year, the law school presents the Judge Richard M. Markus Adjunct of the Year Award in recognition of an exceptional adjunct professor based on professional achievement, teaching and service. This year's honoree was Marvin Sicherman, who teaches bankruptcy law.

Four faculty members retired in 2019 (Lewis Katz, Judy Lipton, Jean McQuillan and Carman Naso), and they were recognized for their years of service during the celebration event. ■

PROFESSOR AYESHA HARDAWAY APPOINTED DIRECTOR OF LAW SCHOOL'S SOCIAL JUSTICE LAW CENTER

From the law school's efforts to improve the county's bail/bond system to its involvement in municipal police reform, Case Western Reserve University School of Law has been a leader in social justice.

"We are delighted to announce that Professor Ayesha Bell Hardaway has been appointed director of the law school's Social Justice Law Center," Co-Deans Jessica Berg and Michael Scharf said. "Professor Hardaway is an extraordinary colleague who will be an outstanding Director."

Professor Hardaway joined the faculty in 2012 after working as an Assistant Prosecuting Attorney for Cuyahoga County and a litigator in the trial department at Tucker Ellis LLP. She has published on issues of racial inequality and social reform and has taught as a clinician in the areas of health law, civil litigation and criminal justice. In 2015, she was selected to serve on the Independent Monitoring Team appointed to evaluate police reforms to be implemented by the Cleveland Police Department under a federal consent decree.

"I am honored by the opportunity to deepen our institutional commitment and understanding of social justice and its place in the law. As a graduate of the law school, the ability of the institution to meet the needs of all of our students while working to address inequities in our legal system is of paramount importance to me as a faculty member," said Hardaway.

"As director, Professor Hardaway will guide the center as the hub of the law school's work in the area of social justice," said Berg and Scharf. "At Case Western Reserve University School of Law, social justice is a unifying theme that our institution aims to incorporate throughout the curriculum," they added. In recent years, CWRU has been ranked among the best law schools for public interest law. ■

ANAT ALON-BECK JOINS LAW FACULTY

Anat Alon-Beck is the newest faculty member to join Case Western Reserve University School of Law as Assistant Professor of Law on the tenure track.

Professor Anat Alon-Beck

Her research focuses on corporate law and entrepreneurship, with a particular focus on how legal and regulatory structures influence entrepreneurial opportunities and firms. She is passionate about empowering women to advance in entrepreneurship and leadership positions in the business world.

Professor Alon-Beck's most recent article, "Unicorn Stock Options - Golden Goose or Trojan Horse?" is forthcoming in Columbia Business Law Review. Several media outlets and corporate law blogs have featured her research on unicorn firms, including the Business Law Prof Blog, Harvard Corporate Governance Blog, Mayer Brown's Free Writings + Perspectives Blog, Bloomberg's Money Stuff and Tech Nation: TheMarker Magazine.

Her article, "Preparing for the Apocalypse: A Multi-Prong Proposal to Develop Countermeasures for Biological, Chemical, Radiological, and Nuclear Threats" (with Constance E. Bagley), was published in Cardozo Law Review. The article was just selected to be featured in the first episode of Cardozo Law Review's new podcast, Below the Line.

Alon-Beck joins the faculty of Case Western Reserve from New York University School of Law, where she currently serves as the Jacobson Fellow in Law and Business. Prior to NYU, she was a visiting assistant professor of international business and management at Dickinson College.

Alon-Beck holds JSD and LL.M. degrees from Cornell Law School, where she served as an editor of the Cornell International Law Journal. She received her LL.B. from Tel Aviv University Buchmann Faculty of Law and served as an editor of Theoretical Inquiries in Law.

"Anat Alon-Beck is a rising star with a unique background whose appointment will enhance our nationally recognized business law specialty area," said Case Western Reserve Co-Deans Jessica Berg and Michael Scharf.

The fall 2018 issue of PreLaw Magazine, a National Jurist publication, ranked Case Western Reserve as one of the top law schools in the nation for business and corporate law, with an "A" grade for the second consecutive year. The ranking is based on the strength of the program in several categories, including faculty scholarship, curricular offerings, concentrations, certificates, clinics and externships. ■

John Gardner

Sadly, on July 18, 2019, at the age of 25, John Gardner of Scranton, Pennsylvania passed away.

John was an outstanding student who excelled in the classroom, as a Senior Editor of the Law Review, and an award-winning member of our Moot Court and Mock Trial teams. More than anything, John was an incredibly kind individual whose thoughtful nature will be missed by his family, friends, and colleagues. He earned a JD from CWRU Law in 2019, and a bachelor’s degree in 2015 from the University of Notre Dame.

Gale Holly Freeman, ‘89

(December 25, 1957- December 17, 2018)

A Tribute to Gale Holly Freeman

“Gale passed away one week shy of her 62nd birthday from a hereditary heart condition. She went in her sleep and without pain. She and I met when we were 1Ls at law school, and enjoyed many long days studying, working on the Journal of International Law and the Canada US Law Institute together. As you know, she was a caring and sharing person. The world is not a better place without her.”

SCHOOL OF LAW

CASE WESTERN RESERVE
UNIVERSITY

11075 East Boulevard
Cleveland, Ohio 44106

On September 5, 2019, CWRU President Barbara Snyder dedicated East Bell Commons, a new 4.2 acre park adjacent to the Law School where the Cleveland Institute of Art used to be. "Turning Point," a Stonehenge-like sculpture created in 2000 by artist Philip Johnson, was placed at the apex of the park pathways.
