

Siegal Lifelong Learning Launches Groundbreaking Bioethics Program Bridging Medicine and the Community

October 14, 2025

The Siegal Lifelong Learning Program at Case Western Reserve University announces the launch of its first-ever Bioethics Program, a unique initiative that brings the professional conversation in clinical medical ethics beyond the hospital bedside and into the broader community.

Featuring leading national experts and frontline professionals, this innovative series addresses some of today's most pressing ethical dilemmas—issues that touch every patient and healthcare provider alike. Topics range from brain implants and genetic testing to faith-based care, gender and medicine, and end-of-life decisions—all explored in a way that is both accessible and deeply relevant to modern medical care.

The program seeks to bridge the gap between professionals and the public, inviting everyone to engage with the moral questions that shape the future of health, medicine, and humanity.

“This Bioethics series offers something meaningful for everyone—because at its core, Bioethics is about the human side of the decisions we make in healthcare, research, and society. It’s about what we all share: our common humanity,” said Mark Aulisio, PhD, Susan E. Watson Professor and Chair, Department of Bioethics, School of Medicine; Co-Director, Center for Clinical Ethics, University Hospitals; and Professor, Jack, Joseph and Morton Mandel School of Applied Social Sciences.

Whether you’re a professional or a patient, we invite you to join us to connect, explore, and learn more about Bioethics. More information and registration can be found here: <https://case.edu/lifelonglearning/courses/bioethics-0> or contact Dafna Ben Yosef, Director of Jewish Lifelong Learning, Siegal Lifelong Learning, CWRU at dby10@case.edu or 216.368.5686.