

CASE WESTERN RESERVE UNIVERSITY School of Medicine

Resident/Fellow Student Teaching Recognition

Case Western Reserve University School of Medicine has two ways of recognizing residents and fellows who contribute significantly to the learning environment through their teaching, mentoring, and other contributions to our education mission.

Option 1: CWRU School of Medicine Trainee Top Teacher (T3) List

The first mechanism is to be named to the CWRU School of Medicine Trainee Top Teacher (T3) List. This annual process will occur in the spring of each academic year, akin to a “Dean’s List” recognition. Trainees can be nominated by students, staff, or faculty based on their significant contributions to medical education. The list will be promoted at the annual Education Retreat and broadly across the academic medical community.

Option 2: Fellow in CWRU Academy of Scholar Educators

Trainees who have specifically dedicated part of their training to medical education, including those in designated medical education pathways (clinical educator residency tracks), can be nominated for fellowship member status within the CWRU Academy of Scholar Educators (ASE). This designation is for individuals who have gone above and beyond excellent teaching, including medical education scholarship, curriculum development, administrative and leadership roles.

Residents who are in the Leadership in Medical Education Collaborative (LME) are automatically given fellowship status and are invited to Academy events. Others (outside the medical education residency tracks) can be nominated once yearly for consideration. All trainees selected for fellowship member status in the CWRU Academy will remain fellows for the duration of their training. Nominations will be accepted in February. We encourage program directors and other core faculty to consider their exceptional resident teachers for this recognition.
