Christina Antonopoulos Buzzy, PhD is a graduate from CWRU. Upon the completion of her doctorate, she focused her post-doctoral efforts on developing a clinical trial knowledge base and IRB regulatory framework as a gateway for understanding the foundation for conducting translational research. During her research stint at University Hospitals, Christina developed clinical research administrative skills in organizing and supervising a collaborative research team. During this time, she wrote ample investigator-initiated and industry-sponsored clinical trial IRB protocols and manuscripts. In her current role at Assistant Director of Research Programs at the Case Comprehensive Cancer Center, her primary role is to facilitate team science proposal development, to support research programs and to provide metrics of these programs for reporting and renewal.

Christina is available to speak to students who would like to advise about a career in administration, clinical trials, program managing and share her experience as she navigated her PhD here at CWRU and post-graduate. If you are interested in speaking with Christina, please email enrich@case.edu.
