Qualitative Research in Nursing Course, Egypt

Cairo University was the site of a three week, culturally engaging "intensive course" on Qualitative Research in Nursing taught by Dr. Cheryl Killion, a medical anthropologist and faculty member in the FPB. The foundational course was taught at the Cairo Faculty of Nursing at Cairo University in Giza, Egypt. Twenty doctorally prepared Egyptian nurse educators, clinicians and administrators, who were seeking to expand the scientific base of nursing in their respective roles, were enrolled in the course. A combination of theoretical and practical dimensions of qualitative research was covered. Content and exercises were offered in data collection, data management, data analysis, and application. In teaching the course, Dr. Killion, drew from ethnographical investigations and community based research she has conducted in Belize, Haiti, and urban areas in the United States. In turn, she was enriched by her exposure to culturally specific health and healthcare approaches in Egypt.

Geriatric Nursing Education Program

The Frances Payne Bolton School of Nursing hosted a group of nine nursing students from Taipei Medical University, Taiwan for the month of July for an educational program in geriatric nursing. The program included presentations by FPB faculty on several topics related to geriatric nursing, visits to local nursing homes, and the VNA. At the end of the program each participant was given a certificate for successfully completing the program.
