

MASTER OF SCIENCE IN NURSING AT CASE WESTERN RESERVE UNIVERSITY

Master of Science in Nursing— Nurse Leadership

Clinically based Leadership and Management Training

Case Western Reserve University's Master of Science in Nursing (MSN) programs are designed to provide you with the skills you need to pursue leadership positions at the unit level and above. As a student in the nurse leadership program, you'll learn to meet the aims of your healthcare institution, as well as the needs of your patient population, through the application of clinically based leadership, management, and quality assessment and improvement practices.

Gain Hands-On Experience

As an MSN student, you will complete 300 practicum hours within your chosen clinical setting. With the help of your advisor, you will identify nursing and/or other healthcare administrators to help foster your leadership growth and apply the skills you've learned in the classroom to meet unit-specific challenges and needs.

Careers

When you graduate, you'll be prepared to combine your clinical experience and leadership training to apply for nurse management positions in a variety of settings, including hospitals, long-term care facilities and more.
