Seminar Title: Community-Police Relations: Basic Approaches and Positive Outcomes

Purpose: The purpose of this seminar is to discuss community-police relations in a contemporary society where the roles and expectations of the police are evolving, and tensions between mistrust of the police and the need for community protection/safety are evident.

Presenters' Biographies

Executive Director Frank Demes oversees Case Western Reserve University's (CWRU) police and security operations, and the communications emergency management and facilities security. Demes joined CWRU after having served as the Assistant Chief of Police and Interim Chief of Police at The George Washington University, Washington, DC. He is instrumental in developing new approaches to safety, including the Bike Patrol, Student Emergency Medical Services, community policing, and crime prevention programs. He is a graduate of the Military Police Academy, Fort McClellan, Alabama.

Interim Chief Jay H. Hodge has been influential in developing campus safety talks, and facilitating a vision of service and teamwork that best supports the University community. He facilitates and participates in dialogue about safety and policing at CWRU. For more than eleven years, he has been employed in the University's police department, and has assumed a variety of leadership positions and responsibilities. He is a graduate of the Ohio State Highway Police Academy and the University of Akron, Ohio.

Objectives: At the end of this seminar the Provost Scholars will be able to:

- (1) Discuss the roles and functions for community-based police relations and how this approach can help to improve communications among citizens and the police.
- (2) Identify three approaches that can be used to enhance community-police relations and give examples of how youth-police communications can be enriched.
