Anti-Hazing Report
January 2023

Published on January 13, 2023

As part of Case Western Reserve University’s commitment to promoting a safe and healthy campus environment, the university does not support or tolerate hazing. All members of the campus community have the right to be free from all forms of hazing, and as such, must conduct themselves in a manner that supports such an environment. View Case Western Reserve University’s Anti-Hazing Policy.

Case Western Reserve University offers an online reporting tool for members of the community to report any concerns related to students, including hazing allegations. The goal of the Community Concerns Reporting System (CCRS) is to provide a clear, streamlined process for reporting incidents of hazing, perceived mistreatment, cultural/ethnic insensitivity, and bias against students. The CCRS allows CWRU community members who have become aware, witnessed or have experienced incidents of hazing, bias, prejudice or discrimination involving a student to submit a report to the Community Concerns Reporting Response Team.

Additionally, community members may report allegations of hazing by the following means: Notify a staff member in any one of the following offices, especially equipped to help you to report, including the Office of Student Conduct and Community Standards, Office of the Dean of Students, and Public Safety; Integrity Hotline; or law enforcement agencies, such as the university’s Police Department, the Cleveland Division of Police, or law enforcement officials in any other relevant jurisdiction. In the case of imminent danger or an emergency, contact emergency response on-campus at (216) 368-3333, or off-campus by calling 911.

In accordance with Collin’s Law, the University completed the following report of instances of hazing violations under the Student Code of Conduct over the past five (5) years. Personal identifying information for individual students has been removed in accordance with the Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act of 1974.
