CURRICULUM DEVELOPMENT & TEACHING

1. Social Data Analysis and Racism -Then and Now. 2021 - 2023
Cross-listed for undergraduate and graduate students.
Designed and taught a 1-credit hour class that used causal diagrams to explore early social science analyses linking race to crime, contemporary uses of data algorithms and the ethical considerations around them.

2. Certificate in Data Science for Social Impact. 2021
Offered by the Jack, Joseph and Morton Mandel School of Applied Social Sciences, CWRU in collaboration with the Case School of Engineering. Digitally Credentialed.
Designed a 12-credit graduate certificate program by which students develop an understanding and fluency in data analytics for social policy and social impact, covering a wide range of current applications of predictive and causal modeling in the areas of health and human services, criminal justice and others. Certificate earners will be able to navigate and influence this new era of technology and data-driven solutions in social welfare and policy, ensuring that proper ethical guidelines are developed and followed.
Created two new classes at the Mandel School to be offered as part of the certificate program:
 - a. Introduction to Data Science for Social Impact
 - b. Research Project Development Class

3. Integrating Community Knowledge and Core Resources in a Graduate Certificate Program in Data Science for Social Impact (DSSI) at Case Western Reserve University. Public Interest Technology – University Network Grant, 2022-2023.
We aim to infuse a new certificate program in Data Science for Social Impact with community knowledge and core data resources so students undertake community-relevant projects that advance social justice. Main objectives: (1) develop a network of community partners to help students learn about current uses, perceptions of data technologies, the experiences of people represented in the data and develop an ethical framework for their projects; (2) integrate this knowledge into a data and project guide covering relevant issues in the areas of social welfare. This project fosters a more diverse network of Public Interest Technologists including the voices of historically marginalized communities in driving positive social impact of technology for all.
