

Letters

Earth Day promotes environmental awareness

To the Editor:

The twentieth anniversary of Earth Day will be on Sunday, April 22. As students and faculty of CWRU we urge you to become involved, aware, and educated about environmental crises which are affecting our planet today.

To promote environmental awareness on this campus, we encourage everyone to attend the upcoming lectures and workshops that are being organized. The McBride Global Currents Lecture Series is currently in progress. On Tuesdays, from 4:30 to 6:00 p.m., in Ford Auditorium are lectures concerning toxic waste, the changing environment, and other such issues. The remaining lectures for this series are on April 3, April 17, and May 1. Additionally, William Moomaw will be giving a lecture on global warming in Strosacker at 8 p.m. on April 23.

We challenge student groups and organizations on campus to become involved as well. Some groups have already agreed to sponsor topical debates and organize carpools to EarthFest at the Cleveland Zoo on April 22, but more help is needed in order to make Earth Day a success.

As an individual, be aware of your surroundings and take care of our natural resources. Recycle aluminum cans and put them in the collection receptacles located in nearly every building on campus, and conserve energy and water.

If you or any organization is interested in becoming involved, or if you have questions regarding Earth Day 1990, call Jennifer King at 754-1792.

Remember, if we all do our part by conserving and recycling, every day can be an Earth Day. Become more aware!

Cassie Harrington
Mike Pullin
Undergraduate Students

B-B gun fire north side never reported by Resident Director

Dear Editor,

I thought it would be of interest was injured in the incident, but what about the next time? Does it take placed on any one individual? Can anyone answer the questions I have

SAF